PREFACE

THE Hospital of St. John, like many other hospitals, has left us no record of the way in which it came into being. In the case of a monastery there is usually little doubt when it was founded and who was the founder. It began with a foundation charter in which the founder was named and the first endowments were recited; and this deed was not likely to be forgotten, partly because it had to be shown to the Visitor whenever he made a Visitation of the house, and also for the reason that as the descendants of the founder had special privileges in connexion with the monastery, they would be interested in the preservation of the deed. Furthermore, in the case of a monastery, the laying of the foundation stone, the consecration of the abbey or priory church, and the institution of the first abbot or prior, were events of a kind to be recorded by contemporary chroniclers. But hospitals, many of which had no endowments but depended upon alms, might spring up or pass out of existence, and little notice be taken. This is the case with all the hospitals in Oxford. We know from a notice in the Hundred Rolls of Edward I that the Hospital of St. Bartholomew was founded by Henry I, but we do not know when it was founded or what endowments it received from the king. Of the hospital for lepers which existed on the north side of the church of St. Giles we know neither when it began nor when it ended; all we know is that it was in existence as early as the reign of Henry III and as late as 1390, and that in the next century the site was in the possession of University College. Unendowed hospitals in the parishes of St. Clement and St. Peter in the East are mentioned in the years 1345 and 1338 respectively, when they had permission to beg for alms, but we do not know when they were founded or where they stood; in fact, it is possible that they never advanced beyond the stage of good intentions, for if the faithful withheld their alms, a hospital of that kind must cease to exist. There were three hospitals at Woodstock, two at Banbury, and one at Bicester, but of none do we know the date of their origin, except the Hospital of St. John at Banbury.[1]

It is definitely stated by mediaeval Chroniclers and by royal charters[2] that Henry III was the fundator of the Hospital of St. John; but the word fundator, when used of a monastic house, had a different meaning from our word founder, and did not designate the man who began the house, but the man who had given the land on which the buildings stood. There is a good instance in the Cistercian Abbey of Thame. It was originally founded by a knight named Gay or Gait on land that belonged to him at Oddington; but when the site was found unsuitable, the monastery was moved to Thame and established on land which was given by the Bishop of Lincoln, and although all the endowments which the original founder gave continued to be held by the monks, yet the Bishop of Lincoln was henceforth reckoned to be founder of the abbey, with such rights as belonged to that position. In the same way Henry III became founder of the Hospital of St. John in the year 1234, for the reason that he provided a new site and new buildings for the Hospital, where now Magdalen College stands, part of the land being bought by him[3] and part belonging to him as protector and, as might be said, lord of all the Jews; but he certainly did not originate the Hospital. This Cartulary contains many deeds which show that the Hospital was in existence and owned property before the date of Henry III's foundation.

An earlier founder is reckoned to be Hugo de Malaunay,[4] or de Malo Alneto, a knight of Oxfordshire, whose chief seat was at Chalgrove. No passage has been found in which he is named founder, but his grant (see Vol. I, p. 73) is entered on the first page of the manuscript Cartulary of the Hospital, as though the scribe of the Cartulary considered it to be in some sort a foundation charter. It also appears from charter no. 14 (see Vol. I, p. 16) that in the year 1346 there was an idea that Hugo de Malaunay was founder of the Hospital; for just as a monastery, when it was unknown who was the donor of a piece of land, always attributed the gift to its founder, should any question arise about the title, so in this dispute about land in St. Clement's the original gift is attributed to Hugo de Malaunay, although as a matter of fact the land was acquired a hundred years later; and again in charter no. 71 Hugo de Malaunay is mentioned very much as a founder would be mentioned. In the preface to charter no. 70 it is pointed out that if Hugo de Malaunay was a founder of the Hospital, his line died out about 1226, and his property escheated to the king, so that the road was clear for the king to become a second founder. But if charter no. 70 is closely examined it will be noticed that it can hardly issue from one who claimed to be a founder; for it is a sale, not a free grant, and a perpetual rent is also retained; so that in two points it is unlike a foundation charter. And in any case it could not be the origin of the Hospital; for the deed states that the Hospital was already in existence, that it possessed money, and had received a gift from John, Count of Mortain.

[4] In vol. i, p. 73, it has been too readily assumed that Hugo Malaunay's deed is a foundation charter.

It is probable that the earliest charters which mention the Hospital are found in the Cartularies of Godstow Abbey and of the Templars of Sandford. The following deed is taken from the latter source (Bodl. Wood MS. empt. 10, fol. 34):

> Uniuersis sancte ecclesie fidelibus fratres hospital*is*[1] sancti Iohannis herbergerie site ad portam orientalem Oxenforde, salutem in uero salutari. This deed is earlier than November 27, 1195, at which date Philip had ceased to be prior of St. Frideswide's;[2] at present the date of his death is unknown, but it must have been between July, 1191, and November 27, 1195.[3] On the other hand, Nigel did not become dean (i. e. rural dean) of Oxford until about 1185; so that the date of the deed is 1185–1195.

But the following deed which is taken from the Godstow Cartulary,[4] now in the Record Office, seems to be earlier still:—

> Sciant omnes presentes et futuri quod ego Simon presbiter de sancto Petro concessi et dimisi et liberaui Iohanni Kepeharm terram meam que est inter terram meam ubi maneo et terram quam Walterus Crampe tenet de hospitali de Ierusalem, illam terram predictam cum medietate gabuli domus mee ubi maneo, ita quod gabulum erit nobis commune, concessi ut predictum est et dimisi prenominato Iohanni in longum et in latum, sicut camera que est super terram condonat et in profundum usque ad terram quam dedi hospitali sancti Iohannis ad portam orientalem Oxenefordie quam Agamundus le Bolter tenet, [habendum et tenendum][5] illi et heredibus [suis de me et heredibus][5] meis firmiter et stabiliter in feodo et hereditate libere et quiete et honorifice, reddendo inde annuatim unum denarium ad festum sancti Michaelis pro omni seruicio. Abyndon, Willelmo diacono filio Randulfi de Lincolnia, Willelmo filio Radulfi, Iohanne fratre suo, Willellmo Coppe, Segar', Rich*ero* nepote prioris.

It is not easy to fix the date of this deed. John Kepeharm died in 1204 or 1205, but the use of the form Oxenefordia, not Oxonia, suggests a date not later than 1200. The succession of the rectors of St. Peter's in the East during the twelfth century is not known, but 'Simon presbiter de sancto Petro' attests a deed which cannot be later than 1165.[1] Likewise 'Iohannes filius Radulfi de sancto Martino' attests an Oseney deed[2] of the year 1163. Apparently he was brother of Nigel de sancto Martino who died about 1200. Segari, called in Oseney deeds Segari Poie or Segari mercator, appears in deeds of about 1190; and we shall not be far wrong if we assign our deed to 1180–1190.

From this deed, therefore, we learn that the Hospital of St. John was in existence in the latter half of the reign of Henry II. We know of no founder and it need have had none; we may imagine that one or more of the residents in Oxford, seeing that a home was needed for the destitute, whether infirm or not, rented or bought a house outside the East Gate and devoted themselves to this Hospital, and by gifts and legacies property was soon acquired. It may be pointed out that the sudden origin or development of the University about the years 1170 to 1190, bringing a large, and often destitute, population to Oxford, must have made such a hospital necessary; and even in later days, when better preparation had been made for scholars, the Hospital was still reckoned to have been founded for the benefit of 'poor scholars and other miserable persons'.[3]

A change in the importance of the Hospital, though not necessarily in its situation or constitution, was introduced by the grant[4] of Hugo de Malaunay, of which the date must be between 1191 and 1199. By that deed the Hospital purchased all that Peter Boterel had owned in Oxford both within and without the city (burgum). Peter Boterel held three knights' fees of the Honour of Wallingford, situated at Chalgrove[1], or more accurately at Chalgrove, Gangsdown, and Rycote, in the county of Oxford. He must have died in the course of the year ending Michaelmas 1165, and in the Pipe Roll for that year the sheriff accounts for 'xx*s*. iiii*d*. de terra Petri Boterelli extra portam del Est de Oxinford'; this was probably the profit for a portion of a year, for in the next Pipe Roll the amount is £2 12*s*. 4*d*. Next year the sheriff accounts for 'xvii*s*. iii*d*. de terra Petri Boterelli de dimidio anno dum fuit in manu regis'; so that we learn that about Easter 1167 the king had ceased to hold this land. The matter is made more clear by the next Pipe Roll, which states that the king had granted this portion of Peter Boterel's land to Osbertus Janitor and his wife at a rent of ten shillings.

The Pipe Roll of 13 Hen. II records that at Easter 1166 they had also been granted Headington Mill 'ad perficiendas x libratas terre quas Rex dedit eis pro servitio suo'. Osbert seems to have died about Michaelmas 1177;[2] the mill was soon granted to Oliver de Plugeney, and it is likely enough that he also obtained the land of Peter Boterel, paying the rent which in the Pipe Rolls of 1186 and 1189 appears at the figure of 10*s*. 8*d*. By Michaelmas 1189 it seems that Oliver de Plugeney was dead and the sheriff accounts for 49*s*. 2*d*., being the issue of the land of Oliver de Plugeney.[3] In this way the land of Peter Boterel reverted into the king's hands and was once more reunited with the lordship of Chalgrove. When King Richard started for the Holy Land, he granted the Honour of Wallingford to his brother John, who in process of time granted to Hugo Malaunay the manor of Chalgrove and the land of Peter Boterel.[4] As it appears from the deed of Hugo Malaunay that John had already granted to the Hospital a rent of ten shillings from the land of Peter Boterel, no doubt the quitrent of which we hear when the land was granted to Osbert Janitor, we can understand how important to the Hospitallers the deed of Hugo Malaunay was. By means of it they acquired the freehold of the land on which apparently their hospital stood, and of which they already possessed the quitrent; and though it was not a foundation charter, it was of similar value. As the Hospital paid a quitrent on Cowlake to the manor of Chalgrove, we may assume that the land of Peter Boterel extended eastward as far as the parish of St. Clement's.[1]

This land of Peter Boterel seems to have been a small manor outside East Gate, and its boundaries those given in charter no. 71. On the south it was bounded by Paris Mead and the grange of St. Frideswide's, which stood at the south end of Rose Lane; on the west it was bounded by the city wall; on the north by the manor of Holywell, which at that time included the north end of what is now the Grove; on the east the boundary was the branch of the Cherwell which runs from King's Mill to East Bridge.[2] That this was a manor seems to be proved by the Inquisicio ad quod damnum which was held when Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, proposed to acquire nine houses between the town wall and Rose Lane, as a site for the Trinitarian Friars. The jury at that time gave as their verdict[3] that the Hospital held the lordship of all these houses, although we know from the Cartulary that it owned the freehold of no more than two of them. The verdict of the jury is confirmed by the statement in the Hundred Rolls of 1279 that the Earl of Cornwall held the site of the Trinitarian Friars 'in capite de magistro Hospitalis',[4] and by another statement in that record, which is now illegible but could be read in Wood's time,[5] that the land of the Hospital extended 'a loco qui dicitur Estbridge et ab insula que dicitur Paris usque ad portam orientalem ex utraque parte vici'.[6] The Cartulary proves that the freehold of the land on the north side of the road from East Bridge to East Gate was not acquired by the Hospital until the fifteenth century, but in 1279 it possessed the lordship or the manorial rights. When this lordship ceased to exist, and why, is unknown to us.

[1] The statement made in vol. i, p. 72, that Cowlake was within Addison's Walk is incorrect. Cowlake is identical with Great Mead (see vol. iii, pp. 22, 186, 274), which was divided into one portion of 5¾ acres called Angel Mead because it was leased with the Angel (vol. iii, p. 381), while the remainder, containing 7½ acres (ib. p. 380), was leased with the Greyhound and was called Greyhound Mead. These meadows lie between Addison's Walk and the eastern branch of the Cherwell (vol. i, p. 154).

Of the situation of this first hospital, which lasted until 1234, and of its constitution we know nothing except what can be deduced from the charters contained in Vols. I and II. As the Hospital was always described as extra portam orientalem, we have some idea where it must have been, and fuller information is supplied by charter no. 351[1] (Vol. I, p. 351), where a piece of land in the parish of St. Peter in the East is described as having one end or 'front' in the churchyard of St. Peter in the East, and the other end 'close to (ad) the city wall, hard by (iuxta) the hospital of St. John.' There can be no doubt that this land extended east and west, so that the buildings of the Hospital must at that time have been in Long Wall Street almost due east of the church of St. Peter, either in the Grove or at the north end of the buildings of Magdalen College School.

A few facts about the constitution and the work of the Hospital in its first stage can be gleaned from the charters which date from before 1234. The Hospital consisted of brethren and sisters, the latter being mentioned in charter no. 266 (Vol. I, p. 266). There is no mention of any master or warden until after 1225, the first instance being in charter no. 558 (Vol. II, p. 71), where Elyas magister appears. The date cannot be later than 1231 because John Pady is described as mayor, and for the same reason it is not earlier than 1225. In two deeds of Michaelmas 1232 to Michaelmas 1233 Elyas capellanus is described as custos (Vol. I, pp. 267, 308). With these exceptions there is no mention of any warden, and it was the custom in these earliest days that leases were granted by the brethren as a body, not by the master or warden.[2] The Hospital is generally described as the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, but in four deeds St. Mary is joined with St. John (Vol. I, pp. 229, 266, 303, and Vol. II, p. 244). The nature of the Hospital is shown by the phrase ad sustentacionem pauperum (Vol. I, p. 229) and by the mention of the firmaria or domus infirmorum (Vol. I, p. 266, and Vol. II, p. 206) in which a light was kept burning. While in most of the deeds the foundation is called hospitalis or hospitale, for the word could be masculine, neuter, or even feminine, in the three earliest charters it is called herebergeria (see Vol. I, p. 73, and Vol. II, p. 435). But it seems that there was no distinction of meaning between the two words, and in two of these three charters the terms are used indifferently. Both of the words are vague, and merely state that the foundation was one where men obtained hospitality or harbour, and do not indicate whether the hospitality was temporary or permanent, or whether it was given to the hale or the sick. A hospital with us means a place where the sick are tended and receive medical care until they die or recover, but in the Middle Ages a hospital might be an almshouse where permanent hospitality was given, and the case of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem proves that a hospital might be a free inn, a place where temporary hospitality was given to pilgrims, necessitous perhaps but not necessarily sick. We have seen that the Hospital of St. John outside the East Gate is described in early deeds as existing for the benefit of pauperes and infirmi, and as Matthew Paris substitutes peregrini for pauperes, we may assume that its purpose was twofold—to receive the infirm like a modern hospital, and to provide lodging for wanderers or tramps. There is no indication that it existed as a permanent almshouse at any time, and it remains to be proved that hospitals of the almshouse type existed as early as the twelfth century, except in the case of leper hospitals. Its constitution shows what was its purpose; for where a hospital was founded as an almshouse, the brethren of the hospital were the aged inmates; but in the case of a hospital which was founded for the temporary shelter of poor and sick, the brethren were permanent residents who took the place of the committee which manages a modern hospital and is in charge of the funds; and such was the case with the Hospital of St. John. The brethren were distinct from the infirm and were in the position of monks in a monastery. It is evident therefore that the Hospital was not of the kind where the aged might settle for life, but was a place where travellers or the sick might be received for a time. Anthony Wood suggests that the Hospital was built for the accommodation of those who made a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Frideswide; but, as far as we know, such pilgrims were few, and probably they came only at the time of St. Frideswide's fair.

[1] The deed is undated, but as Torald, who seems to have died about 1226, is one of the witnesses, we know that it is before the rebuilding by Henry III. The names of Cnitwin and Ailwin Tornarius suggest a date before 1220.

[2] See vol. i, p. 291.

The first indication that King Henry III was interested in the Hospital of St. John is on April 9, 1230, when he commanded Hugh de Neville, his forester, to permit the Hospital to have two loads of dead wood in Shotover Forest daily, as had been the custom heretofore until Brian de Insula stopped it.[1]

On May 5, 1231, the king gave up (concessit) to the master and brethren of the Hospital of St. John the garden which had belonged to the Jews outside East Gate, to erect their hospital there, saving to the Jews a suitable spot outside the said garden for the burial of dead Jews; the bailiffs of Oxford are to give seisin to the Hospital.[2] Two months later, when the king granted King's Mill to the Hospital, he renewed the previous grant, adding on this occasion that the garden was to be used for rebuilding the Hospital (de novo construendum) and that the spot reserved for the burial of the Jews was to be near the said garden.[3] Though the area is described in the grant as gardinum of the Jews it is described as their burial-place in the Hundred Rolls of 1279, where we read that the Hospital was founded by the king 'in area seu curia ubi Iudeorum corpora sepeliebantur'.[4]

[1] Calendar of Close Rolls, p. 320.

[2] Ib. p. 500.

[3] See vol. i, p. 77; Calendar of Close Rolls, p. 530; Calendar of Charter Rolls, p. 135. The original grant was issued at Oxford on July 12, and so it appears on the Charter Roll; but in the Close Roll it is dated 'July 14 at Woodstock'. It is noticeable that both the deeds of May 5 and July 12 use concessit not dedit in connexion with the garden of the Jews; but dedit is used of King's Mill.

[4] Hundred Rolls, ii. 803. Some of these words are now illegible, but they were read by Wood (see City of Oxford, ii. 520).

How or when the Jews obtained this spot is quite unknown. Even if it was their original burial-place, it must have been acquired after 1180; for in that year was drawn up a document recording the mighty works of St. Frideswide, and among other stories it is mentioned that when a Jew of Oxford had recently used slighting words of the saint, not only was he stricken with mortal illness, but also when his corpse was sent to London for burial, as was the custom of the Jews,[1] the cart broke down and the corpse fell out; which shows that Jews at that time were not buried at Oxford. But there is no evidence to show how soon after 1180 it was acquired; nor, again, to show how it became the property of the king. It is likely enough that when the king expressed his desire to have the land, the Jews surrendered it to him to procure his goodwill, only stipulating that a portion should be reserved for their use; accordingly the Jews retained the part on the south side of the road, being 300 feet by 80 or 90 feet, and the Hospital took the rest. If the measurement of 300 feet was from east to west, as seems to have been the case (see Vol. I, p. 38), and if the portion on the north side of the road was of the same width, the garden of the Jews supplied the site for almost the whole of the southern part of the Hospital; for the measurement from the corner by the porter's lodge to the Cherwell is only about 320 feet.[2]

On October 8, 1231, the king gave order to Hugh de Neville that the Hospital of St. Bartholomew was to have five fusta from Shotover forest, while the Hospital of St. John and the Friars Preachers and Friars Minors were to have thirteen fusta.[3]

On February 24, 1232, Hugh de Neville was commanded to supply the brethren of the Hospital with five oaks from Brill Forest and five oaks from Shotover, for the building of the Hospital; and Thomas de Langele, forester of Whichwood, was to supply three oaks for the same purpose, from the forest that was in his charge.[1]

[1] Digby MS. 177, fol. 13.

[2] If, as is stated in the Polychronicon, the King himself laid the foundation stone of the Hospital, the date would be either July 12 or Oct. 8, 1231, for on those two days the King was in Oxford. The former date is the more probable.

[3] Calendar of Close Rolls, p. 568; fustum is a beam of some kind (see Ducange).

On May 25, 1232, the king, being at Woodstock, granted to the Hospital without the East Gate of Oxford fifty cart-loads of thorn and underwood, to be supplied by Hugh de Neville.[2] On June 17, 1232, we hear of further building; for on that day Hugh de Neville is commanded to supply to the Hospital of St. John twenty-three copulas and beams and pannas [3] from the forests in his charge 'for the building of the new chapel of St. Mary which has been begun at the new hospital'; and ten copule are to be supplied for the same purpose from the forest of Cornbury.[4]

Between Michaelmas 1232 and Michaelmas 1233 the king acquired through Geoffrey his almoner a tenement, which to judge from the price was not large, to be added to the site of the Hospital. We are able to state that it was where the gate of the Hospital stood,[5] immediately to the east of what was subsequently Magdalen Hall.

The establishment of the Hospital by the king is assigned by Matthew Paris to the year 1233, in these words: 'Simili quoque pietatis spiritu tactus, idem rex quoddam nobile hospitale Oxoniis constituit, non procul a ponte, ut ibidem infirmi et peregrini suae remedium percipiant necessitatis.'[6] But the year according to our reckoning would be 1234. For on January 26, 1234, the king gives notice by Letters Patent that, as patron and founder of the Hospital of St. John without the East Gate of Oxford, he has appointed that of the goods which he has conferred or shall confer on the Hospital, three brethren, chaplains,[7] shall be maintained, of whom one, elected by the brethren in common and presented to the king, shall be over the others, to keep the rule of St. Augustine, which the king wishes to be observed by the chaplains and brethren of the Hospital, and to be over them in the administration of the temporalities belonging to the Hospital; and that likewise, of the said goods, six brethren, lay persons, and six sisters shall be maintained who shall tend the infirm and poor of the Hospital and administer necessaries to them. The number of the said chaplains, brethren or sisters, shall not be increased until the goods of the Hospital have so increased that more can be fitly maintained, and when it is necessary for more brethren or sisters to be added to the number, then this shall only be done with the licence of the king or his heirs.[1] We should judge from the statutes of the Hospital which were made in 1246 (Vol. III, p. 1) that the three brethren in priests' orders would be the master, the cellarer, and the sacrist.

[7] capellani is the regular word for those in priests' orders.

But the building of the Hospital was not completed for another year or more. On May 30, 1234, the king issued a general mandate to all those persons through whose lands the king's timber is being brought from Reading to Oxford for the work of the Hospital which the king is building there, that they make not any impediment to the passage of it.[2] We may assume that the timber was being sent by the river. On September 25 he gave an order to the keeper of Savernake forest to supply 100 oak-trees to Geoffrey, the king's almoner, 'for the building of our hospital at Oxford'; the king's carpenters would select the trees that are most suitable.[1] The last notice of building is on April 12, 1235, when John de Neville is commanded to supply from Shotover forest to the king's almoner four posts, four pannas, and the necessary laqueos for the building of a kitchen for the Hospital of St. John at Oxford.[2]

It is uncertain who was in charge of the Hospital at this time. We hear of a certain 'J., master of the Hospital of St. John at Oxford' in 1236, who in the month of April appoints William de Mora to be his attorney in a lawsuit about a house in Oxford;[3] and on May 27, 1237, we learn that the archdeacon of Oxford had removed 'brother William', to whom the king had temporarily committed the administration of the spiritual things of the Hospital, and had appointed Elyas to be master.[4] There is no evidence to show who 'brother William' was, but we may conjecture that he was the same as William de Mora. The action of the archdeacon at once raised the question, who had the power of visiting the Hospital and of appointing the master. In the case of most hospitals it was the custom that a visitation should be made by the bishop or an agent of his, when there was a complaint of mismanagement, and for small hospitals probably nothing more was needed than the archdeacon's visitation; but in the case of hospitals that were of royal foundation it was the rule that they were exempt from the interference of the bishop or archdeacon, and that if a visitation was necessary, the king's chancellor would be the visitor. It may be added by way of explanation that whether the bishop or the chancellor was visitor, it was not necessary that they should conduct the visitation in person; but according to law and custom they could delegate their powers to one or more of their clerks. The king in his letter to the archdeacon, dated May 27, says that he marvelled much at the interference; that there could be no question to whom the patronage of the Hospital belonged as 'we founded it for the salvation of our ancestors and endowed it with our own goods'; and commands him to disturb no more the king's right of patronage. On the same day he writes a similar letter to the Bishop of Lincoln, and demands that the bishop should order the archdeacon to recall his presumptuous act.[1] On the next day the king issued a writ to the brethren that they should be 'intendant' to Simon de Norwico, his clerk, to whom he had appointed the charge of the temporalities of the Hospital for the present.[2] He also informed the archdeacon that should he fulminate a sentence of excommunication against the king's bailiffs, or the brethren of the Hospital, disturbing the king's right of patronage in the Hospital, Simon had been appointed the king's proctor, to make appeal against such excommunication. And another letter was sent to Elyas, that he should be content with the chaplaincy for the present and not interfere with the administration of the temporalities, because on account of an expectation of an apostolical privilege a perpetual master cannot at present be made in the Hospital.[3] If the papal privilege was obtained, we have now no record of it. It may be added that Simon de Norwico was at the same time placed in charge of the Abbey of St. James, Northampton, which was vacant.

Three days later, on May 31, the king sent a letter to the priors of Eynsham and Northampton, who had been appointed by the pope judges delegate to decide a cause in which the Hospital was concerned, and bade them stay the cognizance of the cause until the king was in those parts. For as the king is patron of the Hospital, having founded it and enriched it with his goods, the brethren cannot commence any cause about the goods of the Hospital without the king's consent or enter into any disadvantageous composition. Otherwise, the king appeals to the apostolic see and appoints W., the bearer of the letter, as his proctor to make the appeal. He adds that 'he who bears himself as prior in the said hospital is not prior and has not been presented by the king to the bishop'.[4] We do not know what the cause was about which the judges were to give a verdict, but as it had reached the stage of being referred to judges delegate, it must have been of long standing and must have been begun by Elyas; no doubt it is to him that reference is made in the concluding words.

A week later, on June 7, the king wrote to the archdeacon of Oxford that an agreement which had been made between the brethren of the Hospital and the vicar of St. Peter's in the East was prejudicial to the king, as patron of the Hospital; and he appointed W., the bearer of the letter, to appeal against the agreement, as it had been made without consulting the patron of the Hospital.[1] No doubt the matter was about tithes due to the vicar, and had been settled by Elyas in a manner of which Simon, the king's representative, disapproved.

Not long afterwards the office of master was filled. On July 9, the king writes to the Bishop of Lincoln to admit Robert, who ministered in the king's chapel at Oxford (i. e. at Beaumont palace), to the custody of the king's hospital without the wall of Oxford, which the king has thought fit to commit to him during pleasure.[2] It is possible that the bishop made some difficulty about instituting a man who held the mastership only 'at pleasure'; for on September 2 we find that Robert, the king's chaplain at Oxford, is presented to the Bishop of Lincoln for admission to the perpetual wardenship of the hospital at Oxford;[3] and on the roll of Bishop Grosseteste for the year 1237 is the entry that Robert, chaplain, on the presentation of the king, is instituted warden of the Hospital on the resignation of Elyas, chaplain, who had previously been 'rector'; the archdeacon is to give him induction and the brethren are to obey him as their prior and master.[4] This is the only mention of the Hospital of St. John on the rolls of the bishop, and we must assume that subsequent masters were not presented to him and did not receive institution.

It will be noticed that the title of the head of the house was for a time uncertain. Magister was the title which ultimately prevailed, but custos was used indifferently during the thirteenth century and, as will be seen, is found frequently on the Patent Rolls to the very end; and the entry in the bishop's register for 1237, and the king's letter of May 31, 1237, show that at first there was a possibility that the title would be 'prior'. In two or three deeds the head of the house is styled rector.[1]

On November 8, 1241, Henry de Leuekenore was appointed to the custody of the Hospital, until the return of Robert the chaplain, 'who by licence of the king has gone to the north';[2] perhaps Robert died on this journey, for on April 14, 1242, Henry de Leuekenore is appointed to the custody of the Hospital, which he is to hold 'during pleasure', and a command is given to the brethren and sisters to be obedient to him.[3]

On June 27, 1238, the king granted twenty oaks to the warden of the Hospital, for rebuilding his mills which had been burnt.[4] This no doubt refers to King's Mill; for there is no indication that the Hospital had any other mill.[5] On July 12, 1241, the king's mutton 'of the time of St. Martin' which was at Woodstock was given to the custos of the Hospital of St. John for the use of the poor; this was probably the mutton which was salted in November 1240.[6] A gift of twelve oaks for timber is recorded on April 15, 1242, but we do not know what building was in progress then.[7] In the course of the next year the king made two gifts of timber to the Hospital; on May 17, 1243, eight oaks were given[8] to 'the Master of the hospital of St. John outside the East gate of Oxford', and on October 2, 1243, twenty oaks from the wood of Covintry were supplied[9] to John, the king's almoner, 'for the building of the hospital at Oxford'; the probability is that this latter gift was not for St. Bartholomew's, but for St. John's Hospital. Next year there must have been much building at the Hospital; for on March 4, 1244, the king commanded[10] that forty oaks should be supplied to the custos of the Hospital of St. John at Oxford 'for the works of the hospital'; five days later he also granted ten oaks to make a barn at Cornberge.[1] Perhaps this year marks the conclusion of building operations; for no timber was granted in 1245, and the ten oaks which were ordered[2] February 22, 1246, were to build a grange, possibly not at Oxford.

Meanwhile the Hospital was provided with a burying ground. We must conclude that originally both the brethren and the patients were buried in the churchyard of St. Peter's in the East; but on July 20, 1245, the king notified to the archdeacon of Oxford that, the pope having given command to the Bishop of Lincoln to provide a cemetery for the Hospital where the brethren and the patients may be buried, provided that there is no damage to the mother church, the king as patron of the Hospital appoints William the chaplain, and Roger subdeacon, brethren of the Hospital, as his representatives, to secure the indemnity of the mother church.[3] A deed must have been drawn up by which the Hospital granted compensation to the rector of St. Peter's in the East for the churchyard which they were allowed to have; but it is not to be found among the muniments of the Hospital. In a papal grant of privileges of October 6, 1245 (Vol. III, p. 7), there is mention of the cemetery of the Hospital and of the capellas, one chapel no doubt being for the brethren and the other for the patients. Probably both of these are to be distinguished from 'The Charnel', where we know mass was said.[4] Subsequently there were two cemeteries as well as two chapels; for in the last decade of the thirteenth century a space of ground opposite the Hospital was acquired on the south side of the road, where the Bishop of Lincoln gave permission that a cemetery should be consecrated for the patients who died in the Hospital.[1] Wood tells us that many bones were dug up in 1641 between the Physick Garden and East Bridge.[2] On March 23, 1246, the pope wrote to the abbot and the archdeacon of Westminster, who apparently were the conservatores of the Hospital, repeating the privileges that he had granted during the previous year; and if we may believe the clause of dating at the end of statutes of the Hospital,[3] it was on the same date that they were issued or at least confirmed; but the clause has so many errors that it cannot have been on the original statutes but must be the invention of the transcriber; it is probable that the original merely contained the statement that the statutes were confirmed by the pope at the request of the king. We do not know by whom they were drawn up; had they been made by the pope there would have been some reference to the abbot and archdeacon of Westminster, who were the papal conservatores of the Hospital, and the clause of malediction on those who broke the statutes would have contained the names of St. Peter and St. Paul as well as St. Mary. Probably they were drawn up by some clerk of the king. They profess to be additions to some older statutes, of which we have no knowledge. The brethren were to be clothed alike in dark woollen material, 'chamlet or burnet'; in fine weather they would wear a pallium or mantellum, i. e. a gown, with a double cross on the left side below the shoulder; in wet weather a cappa was worn, which would slip over the head, the cross in this case being in the middle in front. A chapter of the house was to be held not daily but weekly. The canonical hours were to be said, but in a somewhat unusual way; for they began matins at dawn not at midnight, and before the office of the day the matins of Our Lady was said; immediately afterwards they had prime, terce, mass, sext, and none, as it appears; evensong and compline are not mentioned, but were probably said together at night, so that the whole of the services for the day were accumulated in two groups.[1] The brethren and sisters were to wait upon the infirm, and were not to be more in number than was necessary for this work. It was expected that some of the sisters[2] would have private servants, but as all the brethren and sisters, as it seems, were to be bound by the law of poverty, we cannot understand how any would have had their own servants unless they had obtained a corrody in which this privilege was stipulated. None were to be admitted as patients who suffered from incurable diseases such as leprosy, palsy, dropsy, or insanity.

Some three months later, June 5, 1246, the king granted to the custos of the hospital outside East Gate the spring of water in the town ditch, known as Crowell, to convey it by an aqueduct to the Hospital; the sheriff was to allow no one to hinder this.[3] Crowell was at the north-east corner of the town wall, at the top of Long Wall Street. It will be noticed in Appendix III that the latrines of the infirmary of the Hospital were flushed by a small stream which flowed from west to east, and in all probability it is the aqueduct which the brethren were permitted to make from Crowell.

During the years 1242 to 1258 there is difficulty in tracing the succession of the masters of the Hospital; and as the Patent Rolls give little help and the Close Rolls are still unprinted, we must fall back on the deeds of the Hospital, of which some appear in this Cartulary and the rest have been calendared by Dr. Macray. Although, as we have seen, Henry de Lewknor was appointed warden on April 14, 1242, yet we find that John de Lewknor, the king's almoner, was acting as warden on May 31, 1242. In three deeds he is mentioned as custos or rector, but only one of them is dated, wherein he is described as 'warden of the Hospital under the king'.[4] He was in office the next year; for on August 20, 1243, 'brother John, the almoner' is bidden provide William de Berking, a blind priest, with food and clothing for life in 'the hospital at Oxford'.[1] It is true there was another royal hospital at Oxford, St. Bartholomew's, but as it was a leper hospital, it cannot be meant here. The fact is that until about 1263 there was a dual headship of the Hospital; on the one hand the king's almoner or chancellor had the supreme control and could grant leases and make agreements about property, styling himself custos, though he did not reside on the spot; on the other hand the chief of the brethren at Oxford, who saw that the rule of the house was observed and the accounts duly kept, was also called custos and sometimes magister, and had business powers concurrent with the king's representative.

Of Henry de Leuekenore or Lewknor we have a deed as late as May 3, 1246,[2] in which he describes himself as 'Master of the Hospital of St. John and parson of Thorentone'; another undated deed in which he is styled 'formerly rector of Thorentone, Warden of the Hospital of St. John' must be later still. He must have died in 1246 or early in 1247, for we have a deed issued by 'Adam the Chaplain, warden of the Hospital', the date of which cannot be later than Michaelmas 1247.[3] We might have expected that the registers of the Bishop of Lincoln would show when Henry de Lewknor resigned the rectory of Thornton, but though the register of Bishop Hugh Wells mentions that he was instituted rector of Thornton, Bucks., in June 1217,[4] the register of Bishop Grosseteste which runs from 1235 to 1254 has no reference to Thornton. The explanation of this may be that as Henry de Lewknor in 1217 appointed a vicar under him to reside at Thornton, the vicarage and rectory would be consolidated when Henry resigned the rectory, and the bishop's clerks forgot to enter the fact that the vicar became the rector.

Adam the chaplain, who was master before Michaelmas 1247, held the office May 4, 1248, on which day he issued a deed which still survives.[5] Meanwhile John the almoner had been succeeded as head warden by Roger the king's almoner. In this Cartulary we have a deed issued by 'Roger the king's almoner' on June 21, 1246,[1] and another by 'Roger de Cramfeld, the king's almoner', on January 1, 1253.[2] There can be no doubt that these were issued by one man, for Roger the king's almoner, who is frequently mentioned in the Patent Rolls, is given the full name 'Roger de Cramfeld' in an entry of August 16, 1242.[3] On March 28, 1253, he was succeeded by 'Master William de Kilkenni, king's clerk', archdeacon of Coventry, and chancellor or at least keeper of the seal, who on that day was appointed to the custody of St. John's Hospital, a writ being issued to the brethren that they should be obedient to him.[4] He was also appointed master of Ospring Hospital; and that he succeeded to these offices on the death of Roger de Cramfeld is made probable by an entry on the Patent Roll, dated April 26, 1253, 'that Master William de Kilkenny, having undertaken the keeping of the king's hospitals, which Roger, sometime the king's almoner, had from the king, shall be quit of all account and reckoning for the time that he shall hold the said keeping'. None of the deeds of the Hospital which survive make any mention of him as custos. On January 1, 1255, he resigned the office of chancellor and was followed by Henry de Wengham, who also succeeded to the office of head warden of the Hospital; for a deed of the Hospital, which we can date by the witnesses to be between January 1, 1255, and November 3, 1258, is attested by 'Henry de Wengham, chancellor of the king and warden of the Hospital of St. John'.[5]

As under warden or acting warden of the Hospital, Adam was followed by a certain Thomas of whom we have two deeds in this Cartulary, one being of the date December 7, 1253, and the other a few months earlier.[6] Other deeds of his are in existence, dated November 30, 1252, and April 28, 1254.[7] Between Michaelmas 1255 and Michaelmas 1256 the master was named Henry,[8] whom we may safely identify with Henry de Wylebi who is named as master in deeds of 1258 and the next few years.[1] On November 2, 1263, as we read in the Patent Roll, 'Henry de Wyleby, master of the Hospital of St. John, received the custody of the same place, as other wardens have been accustomed to have', and the brethren and tenants were commanded to be obedient to him. It will be noticed that Henry is described as already in the possession of the mastership, and what was now given to him was the supreme wardenship which had hitherto been held by the king's almoners or chancellors.

A final concord of November 1264 informs us that the master on that date was named Walter.[2] He is to be identified with Walter de Wyleby or Wilebi, who is mentioned as master in deeds of the Hospital between 1270 and 1280.[3] An entry on the Patent Roll for June 19, 1268, that 'at the instance of Walter de Nevill, Master of the Hospital of St. John without the East gate of Oxford, exemption from being placed on assizes was granted to John de Pontefracto', shows that his full name was Walter de Nevill from Wyleby (i.e. Willoughby in Warwickshire, where the Hospital had land). For a while he was in control of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew as well; for we read in the Patent Roll for November 11, 1265, that the master of the Hospital of St. John at Oxford was commanded to have the care of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew, as Henry his predecessor had, until the king should come to those parts. We have deeds which mention this master after Michaelmas 1278,[4] and an entry on the Close Roll shows that he was master of the Hospital as late as April 19, 1281.[5]

It may be accidental, but it is worth notice, that the king's almoners and chancellors are not styled 'masters' of the Hospital, but 'wardens' (custodes). This may be because they could not satisfy the conditions for the mastership laid down in the rule of the house, that the master should be in priest's orders and one of the brethren of the house. But we find the title custos was also used by the resident master; thus Adam the chaplain in one deed describes himself as custos, in another as magister.[1]

From the year 1281 the succession of the masters is certain. On December 24, 1281, the king appointed Nicholas de Shireveleye, chaplain, 'to the custody of the Hospital of St. John at Oxford, of which he is a brother, founded by King Henry III for the maintenance of the poor'; he is to hold the post for life.[2] The king had shown an interest in him three years earlier; for on January 17, 1278, he wrote to the Bishop of Worcester asking him to confer the orders of deacon and priest upon brother Nicholas de Schreveleck, brother of the Hospital of St. John without the East gate of Oxford, although the same brother is not of the bishop's diocese but because the same Hospital is the king's free chapel where, as in the other free chapels of the king throughout the kingdom, the diocesan ought to exercise no jurisdiction.[3] The name is spelt Nicholas de Schriveley in this Cartulary.[4] In Twyne's time there was in the town archives a roll de iuratis et assisis apud Oxon' coram Salomone de Roff' 13 Ed. I, on which was a plea of Robert, prior of St. Frideswide's, versus Nicholaum magistrum hospitalis sancti Iohannis Oxon'; Twyne gives no details except negat Nicholaus se esse magistrum, immo custodem tantum ad voluntatem regis. Much credence should not be given to such replies in legal proceedings; they are often frivolous and untrue, and the Patent Roll tells us that Nicholas was appointed master for life, not ad voluntatem; furthermore, in the Cartulary he styles himself magister and custos indifferently. But the record is useful as confirming the point already indicated, that one who held the charge of the Hospital temporarily should be called custos not magister.[5] On December 5, 1295, he was superseded by Robert de Scardeburgh, king's clerk, who was appointed to the custody of the Hospital, during the king's pleasure, by reason of its having fallen into debt;[1] but on April 1, 1301, Nicholas was reappointed to his office, during pleasure.[2] He was holding the office in January 1316;[3] and in the same month was associated with the Chancellor of the University to make an inquiry into the state of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew;[4] he must have died towards the end of the year, as on November 18, 1316, the king accepted the appointment of William de Ottington, chaplain, to the custody for life of the Hospital of St. John;[5] the appointment had been made by Queen Margaret, widow of Edward I, who held the proceeds of the town of Oxford as part of her dowry. Under this master the Hospital was reported to be ill-governed, and on October 2, 1331, two of the king's clerks, Robert de Stretford and Richard de Chaddesleye, were ordered[6] to make a visitation of the Hospital, which was reported 'to be much decayed for want of good rule'. In a few weeks the master was dead, and on January 28, 1332, Geoffrey Halyweye of Wolsincote, one of the brethren, was appointed to the custody of the Hospital during the king's pleasure,[7] the Hospital being in the king's hands 'by reason of the death of William de Otyndon'. On January 11, 1335, Adam de Lodebroc, one of the brethren, was appointed to the custody of the Hospital, during the king's pleasure.[8] On August 26 in the same year the king commanded Robert de Stratford, archdeacon of Canterbury, John de sancto Paulo, and mag. Richard de Hunsyngore, who was the official of the archdeacon of Oxford, to make a visitation of the Hospital, 'which is reported to be greatly decayed by misrule, some of the brothers, sisters, and servants being disobedient, wasting the goods of the Hospital, quarrelling among themselves, and leading dissolute lives'.[9] We have no details of the visitation, but it appears that Adam, the new master, showed zeal for good rule; for on March 12, 1337, the king granted to Adam de Lodebrok, warden of the Hospital, that in consideration of his industry in the ordering its affairs, he shall hold for life the custody of it, which hitherto he had only held at the king's pleasure.[1] He was alive on July 10, 1350, when the king issued a commission to hear and settle his complaint that he had been assaulted and robbed by the vicar of Headington,[2] and on October 12 of that year he issued a charter which still survives.[3] Two years later, on October 24, 1352, John de Iddebury, a brother of the Hospital, was appointed to its custody, during the king's pleasure, and the sheriff was commanded to give him induction.[4] On August 12, 1361, Robert de Tewe, priest, having been elected by the brothers and sisters of the Hospital to be a brother and master and warden of the Hospital, which was void by the death of John de Iddebury, the king granted that he should hold the wardenship according to the force and effect of the election.[5] On the death of Robert de Tewe, the king on May 28, 1384, confirmed the election of Adam de Merston, and issued a writ to the brethren and sisters to be obedient to him.[6] Three years later, May 18, 1387, the king confirmed the election of a second John Iddebury, one of the brethren, to be warden in the room of Adam de Merston, deceased, and a writ was issued to the brethren and tenants in the usual form.[7] On December 10, 1392, the king granted that Richard Tewe should hold the wardenship of the Hospital, 'to which he has been elected by the brethren of the house on the death of John Iddebury'; the customary writ of obedience was issued 'to the brethren' of the Hospital; [8] and it is noticeable that there is no mention of 'sisters' either in the writ or in the description of the electors. The next master was William Lodebrok, to whom the king granted on August 28, 1434, that he might hold the mastership to which he had been elected by his fellow brethren on the death of Richard Tewe.[9] He and the next two masters held office but a short time; for on January 28, 1436, Thomas Oxenford, one of the brethren, received the grant of the mastership, having been elected by the brethren on the death of William Lodebrok; [10] and on March 9, 1438, the king accepted the election of brother Hugh Burton as warden of the Hospital of St. John, in the place of Thomas Oxinford, deceased, and granted to him the said wardenship.[1] The last master was 'brother Richard Vyse', to whom the king granted the wardenship on May 18, 1442, void by the resignation of Hugh Burton.[2]

In these entries the following points may be noticed: The head of the house is entitled indifferently magister or custos to the very end. It is probable that in every case he was elected by the brethren; for the entry about Hugh Burton in 1438 shows that the statement that a man had received the wardenship by the grant of the king need not imply that there was no election as well. The 'grant' by the king takes the place of 'institution' by a bishop. The 'induction' in the case of the first master was given by the archdeacon, but in all subsequent cases, as far as we know, by the sheriff. It is probable that the brethren could not elect one from outside their number, for we are told that when they wished to elect Robert de Tewe in 1361, before he was elected master they took the step of electing him a brother. It has been indicated that there is no mention of sisters in the Hospital after the year 1384, when they are mentioned in the king's writ; and as we hear nothing of sisters at the time of the dissolution of the Hospital and the notice of the election in 1392 is pointedly silent about them, we may assume that they came to an end between 1384 and 1392. This is confirmed by the record[3] of a court held at Oxford on September 26, 1390, under the Statute of Labourers, at which the master of the Hospital was accused of paying excessive wages to thirteen servants. The last of them, by name Alice Deye and Alice Mey, stated 'quod seruiunt infirmis in dicto hospitali existentibus et multum circa eos uigilant et laborant'. It is not impossible that servants were hired to help the sisters in their nursing, but the more probable conclusion is that there were no sisters. Some of the masters were appointed for life and some

'during pleasure'; it seems that from 1300 to 1352 all the masters were in the first instance appointed 'during pleasure', and that from 1361 to 1442 they were appointed for life; but many of the entries are silent on the matter.

The Hospital of St. John was used by the king, like other monastic houses, as a place where his servants could be provided for, when they were past work. The following entries are taken from the Calendar of Close Rolls: On March 8, 1293, the king sends to the Hospital his servant Nicholas le Ferur, now incapable of work, requesting that he be provided with the necessaries of life as long as he lives; on June 6, 1306, the master of the Hospital is commanded to admit Roger de Braithewell, who has been maimed in the king's service in Gascony, and to provide him with the necessaries of life as long as he lives; on November 26, 1307, the king commands the Hospital to admit Geoffrey de Castre, king's chaplain, whom the king is bound to provide with sustenance in return for his service, as he has refused a benefice involving a cure of souls, and to find him and a clerk serving him fitting sustenance in food, drink, robes, shoe-leather, wood, litter and other necessaries for the term of his life, and to find him a fitting chamber for his residence within the enclosure of the Hospital, as previously commanded by letters under the king's privy seal, to which they have paid no attention; on August 12, 1314, the master of the Hospital is ordered to provide maintenance for John de Sheperton, who has been a servant of the king and is now unable to labour for his living; on January 14, 1342, the king issues to the Hospital a mandate to admit a servant of the king, William de Staveleye or Staneleye, cook, and to provide for him as long as he lives, as he has long served the king and is now infirm; on April 10, 1342, the order is repeated, the name now being given as William le Keu (= cook) of Staneleye or Staveleye; on February 18, 1357, the king sends John de Helmeswell to the Hospital to receive there for his life such maintenance as William Kyngesman, deceased, had there at the king's request. This last entry shows that the Hospital was not expected to provide for an unlimited number of the king's servants, and that a new nomination was not made until there was a vacancy by death.

The Hospital was also occasionally used in the same way for the reception of women. Thus we find on the Close Roll of Henry III that on September 29, 1235, he commanded the brethren of the Hospital to admit Maud, daughter of Geoffrey le Chamberleyn, whom he is sending them, to be one of their sisters; and on May 1, 1236, he sends them a similar order to admit Milisant, widow of Symon le Establer, to whom he has granted that she should be one of the sisters at the Hospital. It may be noticed that these women are to occupy a position different from that of the men whom the king sent to the Hospital; the men were to reside there as guests, but the women were to become sisters, incurring on the one hand the duty of keeping the monastic rule and of helping with the nursing of the sick, on the other the privilege of electing the master and having a voice in the management of the house. In 1341 a woman named Alice fitz-Ralph obtained a writ from the king that she should receive her maintenance for life at the Hospital. Our information is derived from the Patent Roll of 15 Edward III, where we read that Alice on payment of twenty shillings obtained from the king that her complaint should be tried by a commission. She seems to have had difficulty in framing her complaint correctly, and it was first drawn up on May 1, and amended on May 8 and July 3. Her statement was that Adam, master of the Hospital of St. John, Henry de Stodeleye, John le Peyntor, John Peggy, Richard Selwode, John Alston, John Norton, and others assaulted her in a suburb of Oxford, imprisoned her, afterwards veiled her face, brought her by night so veiled and imprisoned to a street there, threw her into a filthy place, took from her a writ under the privy seal addressed to the master of the Hospital that she should have her sustenance in the Hospital for life at the king's request, took her goods at Oxford and at Shaldeswell, and carried them away. We gather from this that she was a native of Shaldeswell (i.e. Shelswell), and as the residents of Oxford who took part in the assault are known to have been men of high position and the leading men of the town, we may guess that they represented public opinion and that the general feeling was that Alice was unfit to be admitted to the Hospital. We also notice that the writ she received was under the privy seal, which explains why the Close Rolls, of which there are calendars from 1272 for the next hundred years, give none of the writs which nominated women to be received in the Hospital. We do not know what was the result of the inquiry.

Another complaint against the Hospital of St. John occurs on the Patent Roll of 41 Edward III, where we read that on July 6, 1367, the king issued a commission to find by inquisition the names of those who with Robert de Tewe, master of the Hospital of St. John at Oxford, John de Ichendenne, brother of the Hospital, William Hamond and William Cook, imprisoned and ill-treated John Glovere, servant of Ingelram de Coucy, earl of Bedford, at Oxford, took £20 in money which the earl had delivered to him for expediting his business, and compelled him, before he could leave prison, to be condemned in £100 to the said William and William before the chancellor of the University of Oxford, and to be bound to them in another £100 before the mayor of Oxford and the clerk of the recognizances at Oxford; whereby the earl's business remained undone. William Hamond and William Cook were apparently lay servants of the Hospital and are mentioned frequently in these volumes,[1] while John de Ichenden was a brother who was at the head of the business of the house.[2] Reading between the lines we conclude that John Glovere had at some time incurred a debt to William Hamond and William Cook, and that when he journeyed to Oxford he put himself within the power of his creditors, and was taken by them into the chancellor's court and there condemned to pay. If this is so, the proceeding was lawful, though doubtless annoying to the Earl of Bedford.

On more than one occasion the king found it necessary to insist that the Hospital was exempt from episcopal visitation. Pope Innocent III in 1245 forbade any diocesan bishop or archdeacon to exact 'procurations' from the Hospital by reason of paying a visitation;[1] but we have seen that as early as 1237 the king had claimed that the archdeacon had no power to make a visitation, and on November 8, 1304, Edward I wrote to the Bishop of Lincoln 'that[2] he permit the Hospital of St. John at Oxford to be quit of payments, procurations, and other exactions of the ordinary, and to release to the Master and brethren of the Hospital any distress that he may have levied in this behalf, as the Hospital, which was founded of the alms of the king's progenitors, has been wholly exempt from all jurisdiction of the ordinary and from all such payments from the time of its foundation, so that no one but the king and his chancellor ought to visit or intermeddle with it'. Again, on April 4, 1320, when the archbishop was visiting the diocese of Lincoln as metropolitan, Edward II wrote[3] to him in almost identical terms, and stated that a letter to the same effect had been sent to the Bishop of Lincoln on November 8, 1304. A third instance is supplied in this Cartulary,[4] King Richard II writing on September 5, 1397, to the Bishop of Lincoln, forbidding a visitation of the Hospital which he proposed to make. It is likely enough that similar letters were sent on other occasions. Whenever the bishop planned to visit a monastic house, a notice was sent giving warning of the day, and whenever the Hospital of St. John received such a notice, they would appeal to the king's chancellor, who would send a letter claiming exemption for the Hospital.

It was not uncommon that when there was quarrelling in a monastery those that were to blame were sent to reside in another monastery. Accordingly in the reigns of Edward II and III, as we learn from their Close Rolls, some of the brethren of the Hospital of Ospring were sent to the Hospital of St. John. On May 16, 1314, Nicholas de Staple, one of the brethren of Ospring Hospital, who quarrelled with the master, was commanded to transfer himself to the Hospital of St. John, where he was to be provided with the necessaries of life, as one of the brethren, until further orders. On March 23, 1327, Nicholas de Staple, who in the meanwhile must have returned to Ospring and had been elected master, was sent to the Hospital of St. John to be admitted as one of the 'chaplain brethren', in the place of brother William de Dewesburi, who is to be sent from Oxford to be admitted at Ospring. On March 26, 1332, Thomas Urre, one of the brethren of Ospring, is sent to the Hospital of St. John, to be there provided with the necessaries of life at the expense of the house at Ospring; and on October 10, 1334, Nicholas de Staple is once more sent back to Ospring, where he is to live as one of the brethren.

In the rolls of Edward III we find many references to the poverty of the Hospital and to exemption from taxation. The charters of liberties granted in 1246 and 1266 released the Hospital from certain payments of fees, such as the sheriff's aid, and from fines which fell on a district, such as murdrum, which fell on the hundred, or a fine which fell on the whole county; but no exemption from tallage or other tax was granted.[1] On October 4, 1237, the Hospital was given exemption from a thirtieth that was then being collected,[2] and it was also exempt when the taxation of Pope Nicholas was made in 1291 on all the ecclesiastical revenue of the country. In 1278, when a tallage of a tenth and a fifteenth was granted to Edward I and all the religious houses in Oxford paid a tenth on their rents, the Hospital of St. John paid £11 8*s.* 8*d.* on tenements within the town and 16*s.* on tenements in Northgate Hundred,[3] so that its rental from Oxford at that time must have been £122. On August 30, 1327, Edward III issued a writ to the mayor of Oxford 'quod Prior et fratres hospitalis sancti Iohannis extra portam orientalem Oxonie et homines sui apud Oxoniam liberi et quieti esse debeant de omnibus tallagiis et contribucionibus cum communitate ville predicte prestandis'. This writ is not on the Close Rolls, but the original was seen by Twyne in the Archives of the Town, and his copy (Twyne MSS. xxiii, 28) may be trusted. On December 16, 1332, when a tenth and a fifteenth were being levied in Oxfordshire, the collectors were bidden take nothing from the Hospital of St. John without the East gate of Oxford, founded by Henry III of his alms, 'as it is so slenderly endowed that its goods now hardly suffice for the maintenance of the master and brethren and of the weak and infirm therein, and of other almsgiving to be made according to the ordinance of the said king, and if it be charged with the aids granted to the king by the community of the realm, it will be necessary for the master and brethren to diminish the said alms'.[1] Two years later, December 15, 1334, another order was given to the collectors in the same words.[2] On March 14, 1336, the Hospital received a new grant from the king, that it should be exempt from all aids granted to the king whether by laity or clergy, should it be proved that it would be necessary to restrict the chantries and almsgiving of the Hospital, if it was forced to contribute to the tax.[3] On December 12, 1338, the takers and purveyors of wool were commanded to take none from the Hospital of St. John, as it was so slenderly endowed that it would be necessary to reduce its alms, if it was charged with the aids granted by the community of the realm;[4] and on the same day a similar letter was sent to those who were collecting the triennial tenth and fifteenth.[5] A few months later, June 6, 1339, those who were arraying men at arms in Warwickshire, in which county the Hospital had land, were bidden lay no charges upon the Hospital, the same reason being assigned as before,[6] except that there is mention of chantries as well as alms that would suffer if the Hospital was impoverished, thus repeating the language of the charter of 1336. On July 18, 1340, those who were assessing the subsidy of the 'ninth', and those who were collecting, were commanded to take nothing from the three hospitals of Maison Dieu at Dover, Ospring, and St. John's at Oxford, in each case the reason being that the alms of the hospitals would be diminished, if they contributed to the tax.[1] A year later, July 12, 1341, the assessors and collectors of wools in the counties of Warwick and Oxfordshire were bidden levy none from the Master and brethren of the Hospital of St. John, 'as they have shown the king that although the Hospital was founded by Henry III for all the poor infirm resorting thither, to remain there until they are healed and to find divers chantries and alms', it is so slenderly endowed that it would be necessary to diminish the alms, if contribution was made to the aids granted to the king.[2] On December 15, 1341, the king wrote to those who were collecting wool in the counties of Oxfordshire, Warwickshire, and Buckinghamshire that they should supersede until a fortnight after St. Hilary's day the exaction they have made upon the Hospital of St. John, so that after deliberation with the council the king may cause what is reasonable to be done, as the Hospital was founded by Henry III for the maintenance of the Master, brethren, and sisters and of the weak and infirm poor, and for maintaining chantries, alms, and other works of piety for the souls of that king and his heirs and of all the faithful departed, and if the Hospital be charged with the aids granted by the clergy on the community of the realm it will behove the Master and brethren to diminish their alms, on which ground the king has granted that the Hospital should be for ever quit of all aids and tallages;[3] this last clause refers to the royal grant of 1336. The decision of the king and council seems to have been that on this occasion the Hospital ought to be exempt; for on May 22, 1342, a mandate of the king and council was sent to the collectors of wool in the same three counties to collect no wool from the Hospital of St. John, otherwise it would be necessary for the Hospital to reduce its alms, 'and they are discharged of all contributions and taxations as has been testified before the king and his council by John, archbishop of Canterbury, William de Shareshull and other lieges worthy of confidence'.[1] The last clause seems to mean that it was testified that under the present circumstances the Hospital was discharged from all contributions. Perhaps this testimony was not considered adequate, for on October 26 John de Alveton and William Louches were instructed to make an inquisition about the alleged poverty of the Hospital and see whether the burdens incumbent upon it were such that it was unable to contribute its share of the wool which had been voted to the king.[2] On December 15, 1342, the king sent a mandate to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer to postpone until next Easter the demand for wool made upon the Hospital of St. John, as the king has granted by charter that if such payment would make it necessary to diminish the alms of the Hospital, it is to be exempt.[3] Finally, on May 23, 1343, the king ordered the treasurer and barons of the exchequer to supersede their demand upon the brethren and sisters of the Hospital for the tenth, fifteenth, ninth, wool and other aids,[4] as the king has granted by charter that they and their successors should be quit of all manner of aids, contributions, and tallages. As far as the Calendar of Close Rolls reaches, i.e. to 1381, there is no other reference to any exemption of the Hospital; but Twyne saw two other writs among those that were preserved in the Town Archives; of these the former[5] is described as of the seventeenth year of the reign (i.e. 1343) and was 'pro exemptione hospitalis a solvenda taxacione lane atque eciam decime aut decime quinte sive alterius cuiuscumque quote, etiamsi summus pontifex decimam seu quamcumque aliam quotam clero Anglie imposuerit et eam aut aliquam partem eiusdem domino regi concesserit'. Twyne does not say to whom the writ was issued, but there can be no doubt that it is distinct from the writ issued to the exchequer on May 23 of the same year. The second writ seen by Twyne[1] was of the eighteenth year (i. e. 1344), and was addressed 'ad Priorem sancte Frideswide, collectorem lanarum, et socios suos ut supersedeat a colligenda lana a fratribus et sororibus hospitalis sancti Iohannis extra portam orientalem racione temporalium suorum in villa Oxonie'. That the prior of St. Frideswide's was a collector of wool we know from a writ of March, 1342, which orders that he should be distrained for delay in collecting the wool.[2] As the king was granted no wool after the year 1341, it appears that the prior of St. Frideswide's must have been collecting his arrears in 1344.

We may insert here two other references to the Hospital of St. John which were copied by Twyne from records which have now perished. The first[3] was a writ:—

> 'Rex vicecomiti Oxon' salutem. Questus est nobis magister hospitalis sancti Iohannis extra portam orientalem Oxonie quod magister Henricus de Seton, custos domus scolarium aule de Balliolo Oxonie, Thomas de Waldeby et Ricardus de Ratford iniuste et sine iudicio disseisiuerunt eum de libero tenemento suo in Oxonia post primam &c. Teste me ipso apud Westmonasterium, xxviii die Februarii, anno regni nostri xvii$^{\text{mo}}$.'

Both Edward I and Edward II were at Westminster on February 28 in the seventeenth year of their reigns, but it is generally assumed that this writ is of February 28, 1324; it seems that by the middle of the next year Richard de Ratford or Retford had ceased to be a member of Balliol.[4] The second was a list of presentments at a view of frankpledge,[5] of which the date is not given, but internal evidence shows that it must be later than 1350: 'magister sancti Iohannis extra portam orientalem Oxonie acrochiavit sibi quandam insulam extra portam orientalem, de antiquo spectantem ad dominum regem et burgenses suos Oxonie.' The presentments are apparently for the north-east ward. If the burgesses of Oxford ever owned an island on the north side of the bridge, it can only have been as waste land; the waste of the manor belonged to the burgesses as part of the fee-farm of the town. But it is wise to remember that in presentments of this kind reckless accusations were made. Possibly it is merely a repetition of an accusation which was raised and settled a hundred years earlier at the eyre of 1285, when it was stated that 'a certain Henry, Master of the Hospital of St. John, had appropriated, sixteen years before, an island surrounded by the water of Charwell, one pole in extent, worth 6d. a year; which plot used to pertain to the borough of Oxford'. Whereupon the master appeared in court and agreed to pay to the king an annual rent of sixpence for the island.[1]

A third deed which Twyne has preserved[2] is called by him arbitramentum sive laudum. It is the settlement of a dispute between Merton College and the Hospital of St. John in these words:—

> 'Scilicet quod quidam Brede inter Yrismen poole et aquam de Charwell fiat de novo bene et sufficienter emendat' et reparat' secundum quod hactenus fieri consueuit custibus et sumptibus predictorum magistri et fratrum ista vice tantum, et exinde dicti custos et scolares reparabunt in perpetuum sumptibus suis propriis et emendabunt totiens quotiens necesse fuerit; et insuper quod rivulus currens a dicto le Brede et aqua inde simul, cum piscaria usque ad stagnum molendini predictorum magistri et confratrum sancti Iohannis, de cetero sit aqua cum piscaria dictorum custodis et scolarium; ac insuper quod aqua currens a dicto molendino versus austrum sit communis aqua et piscaria usque quoddam cornerium cuiusdam crofti dictorum magistri et confratrum, et quod pisces inde capti et omnia alia emolumenta equaliter dividantur prout abbas de Oseney et balliui domini regis ville sue Oxonie capiunt et piscantur; proviso semper quod omni tempore ad libitum dictorum magistri et confratrum bene liceat predictis magistro et confratribus facere cariagia in dicta aqua; ac vero insuper quod rivulus et aqua inde currens simul cum piscaria incipiens a dicto cornerio predicti crofti versus orientem et currens versus occidentem > in perpetuum sit separalis rivulus cum aqua et piscaria predictorum custodis et scolarium.'

The dictionaries give no suitable meaning for the word brede; possibly it means a ditch to carry the overflow from Irishman's Pool (i. e. Parson's Pleasure) to the Cherwell below King's Mill. The complaint may have been that the Hospital of St. John, by damming the water at King's Mill, injured the meadow land of Holywell which lay to the north-west. As the ditch would be made on the land of Holywell, the fishing in it would naturally belong to Merton College. The reference to Oseney is merely brought in as an example of water owned equally by two parties; it does not refer to the Cherwell, but to water of the Thames near Oseney. Twyne thinks that brede means bridge, but it does not seem likely. Can it mean an overflow, which checks or bridles the water?

The Hospital had the right of holding a court for its own tenants, but by what grant is uncertain. The record of it has been preserved by Twyne, who copied the roll of a hustengs court of January 23, 1300, which has now perished.[1] The words are:—

> 'Curia Oxonie tenta die Lune[2] in crastino sancti Vincencii martiris anno Ed. I xxix°. Adam de Tywe queritur de Baldewyno le Webbe, quod ubi fuit die dominica proxima post festum Concepcionis beate Marie Virginis anno regni regis Edwardi nunc vicesimo nono post prandium in domo Willelmi le Mercer in parochia sancti Petri orientalis in suburbio Oxonie extra portam orientalem Oxonie, venit dictus Baldewynus et cepit ipsum per pectus & dilaceravit supertunicam dicti Ade a collario usque ad zonam suam, & non eo contentus clausit ostium dicte domus et extraxit cultellum suum et voluit ipsum occidisse, nisi rescussus fuisset per Petrum le Harenger; unde dicit quod deterioratus est et habet dampnum ad valenciam xl solidorum, et hoc paratus est &c. Et super hoc venit frater Willelmus de Otyndon de hospitali sancti Iohannis extra portam orientalem Oxonie et petit curiam suam hospitalis predicti de predictis Ada & Baldewyno, tenentibus hospitalis predicti, et > concessa est ei; et idem frater Willelmus assignavit partibus predictis diem curie die dominica proximo sequente post hunc diem.'

It is probable that this William de Otyndon was the brother who was elected Master nearly thirty years later. The record leaves us uncertain whether the court of the Hospital was only for those who, like Baldwin and Adam, dwelt outside East gate, or applied to all their tenants in Oxford. We are not aware that the Hospital was granted the right of sak and sok by the king, but we have suggested that the land of Peter Boterel outside East gate was originally a manor with a manorial court attached to it.

Another right of the Hospital was to take the goods of their tenants who committed suicide or were condemned as criminals. This privilege was granted by Henry III in 1246 and 1266 (vol. ii, p. 399), and we see it used in the case of Edward de Hales, who lived in one of the houses of the Hospital in St. Mary's parish.[1] When he took refuge in a church in 1298 and abjured the realm, the bailiffs seized his goods; but the Hospital obtained a writ from the king according to the tenor of the charter of Henry III, and when the writ was presented to the bailiffs, they surrendered the goods to the Hospital.

A third privilege of the Hospital was to receive forfeited goods of various kinds from the market of Oxford. Perhaps the first instance is in a charter of Edward I, January 10, 1284, by which when forestallers and regraters make purchases contrary to the liberties of the University, the goods are to be taken to the Hospital of St. John and given to the poor and infirm.[2] In 1290 it was decided that putrid meat and fish that was forfeited in the market, and also the amercements for the offence, should be granted in the same way to the Hospital.[3] It need not be assumed that the meat and fish were to be eaten by the patients; there was a demand for flesh of any kind for feeding the fish in fish-ponds, and what was forfeited to the Hospital could be sold for this purpose or used in the fish-ponds of the Hospital. Another extension of this principle was made in 1348, when it was decided that the Hospital should receive one-tenth of the amercements from the assay of weights and measures.[3] A deed of April 1348, recently acquired by the Bodleian Library, shows that this last point was decided by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Chichester, to whom it was referred whether the tenth penny from the amercements and forfeitures of the assay should be given to the Hospital of St. John, or to maintain a light at the morning mass in St. Mary's, or for the repair of Petitpount; the judges selected the first. As far as is known, there survives but one roll of the assay of weights and measures, now in the University Archives (Y. 16, rot. 30), from which we learn that the income from this source was small. It is undated, but is apparently of 1347; whether the court was held yearly or half-yearly we do not know. On this occasion there were but twelve offenders in the whole of Oxford, and though the amount of the amercements is not given, we know that they were always light in the Middle Ages, so that it is not likely that the tenth portion which was given to the Hospital amounted to more than a shilling.

A fourth privilege was the right of sanctuary, which was claimed on one occasion in 1463, and of which we have given details in vol. ii, p. 2. It is hardly credible that all the tenements, or even one tenement, of the Hospital had been granted this right by a papal bull, and it may be noticed that the man who fled to Broadgates did not maintain that it had been granted by any one pope but 'a Romanis pontificibus'; and when the proctor was convinced that the claim was just, it was not by inspection of a papal bull but by instruction (instructus per custodem). It was probably an idle tale which sprang up in the middle of the fifteenth century, and it is noteworthy that the proctor had hitherto no knowledge of any such privilege. Hospitals were certainly treated by popes and bishops with special favour above all monastic houses, and some may have started the idea that hospitals and all their properties in old times had the right of sanctuary according to church law, and ought still to enjoy it. The matter was not examined by any court of law, and the proctor, who was evidently very willing to be convinced, was satisfied with the evidence of hearsay. In 1580 it was maintained that all the ground which was included within the wall of the College was sanctuary, 'and that a man being apprehended for felony did claim for sanctuary about 54 years past, and had the same'.[1]

Of the inner life of the Hospital we have little means of judging. There are no complete rentals to show us what was its income, and the Taxatio of Pope Nicholas gives us no help. As there are no computus rolls beyond the fragment printed in this volume, pages 19 to 27, we know little of the names and numbers of the brethren and sisters and how the income was spent. We know that in 1234 it was settled that the Hospital should consist of three brethren in priest's orders, six lay men and six lay sisters, and that when the Hospital was dissolved in 1457 there were five brethren, all of them priests. In 1340 there is some indication that besides the master there were seven sisters and nine brethren,[2] and as eight of the latter are styled 'frater' we are inclined to assume that they were in priest's orders and only one a layman, or possibly a probationer. If some of the eight had been laymen, there would have been some alteration in title to distinguish those who held the higher rank as priests. In all monasteries the lay brethren, which were numerous in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, disappear subsequently, and the rule arose that all the brethren should be ordained as soon as possible; and it was probably the same with the Hospital. In the register of John Gilbert, bishop of Hereford, there is a notice that on May 23, 1388, Edmund Waterdene of St. John's Hospital outside the East gate of Oxford was ordained subdeacon in Hereford Cathedral,[3] and when other episcopal registers are published we shall have more instances. We have proof that the Hospital was used in the fourteenth century, much as we use modern hospitals, as the place to receive those who were injured. Thus in 1305 Robert Attewyndyate, who lived near the South gate of Oxford, having his finger broken with a blow, was taken to the Hospital of St. John, where he died;[1] and in 1396 a certain Roger, who had fallen into the water from East Bridge, was carried to the Hospital.[2]

The original hospital stood, as has been shown, in Long Wall Street, and its site may be represented by the land which is mentioned in deed no. 149, bounded on the west by Long Wall Street and on the east by the lane which ran between Magdalen Hall and Magdalen College; on the south the boundary was the north wall of the tenements in the 'Gravel Walk', and on the north was 'The Grove' (virgultum). For the buildings of the second hospital the reader is referred to Appendix III.

When the plan is consulted at the end of volume i, entitled 'Oxford outside East Gate in 1771', it will be noticed that the line of the property of Magdalen from the porter's lodge to East Bridge is different from the line of the houses from Long Wall Street to Magdalen Hall; and the question arises whether this was so in the days of the Hospital of St. John, or whether the houses were thrown back about 1480, when they were rebuilt. It is certainly the case that roads in the Middle Ages outside the towns were of great width, that carts might be able to avoid the holes and bogs, and it may be the case that the road from East Gate to East Bridge was of the width of 70 or 80 feet, the part over which the traffic might be diverted being on the north side of the road from East Gate to the Hospital and on the south side from the Hospital gate to East Bridge. It is also true that the instances of Balliol College and St. John's show that this extra width of road could be enclosed in later times, when the care of roads made such width unnecessary. But the evidence, such as it is, suggests that in the days of the Hospital the houses stood where now is the line of the street, and that the 'Gravel Walk', as it was called, was made when Magdalen College was built. The chief argument is drawn from the rentals, which show that during the years 1478 to 1484 all the houses between Long Wall Street and Magdalen College were pulled down and rebuilt; but it is very unlikely that a dozen contiguous houses would all need to be rebuilt, unless it was intended to alter the frontage and erect the row on a new site. In 1519 it was called 'the Newe Rewe',[1] and though this might mean 'the row of new houses', it more naturally means 'the row in the new position'. Also it must be noted that Balliol did not enclose the northern side of Broad Street until 1683,[2] whereas the Gravel Walk was enclosed with a wall certainly before 1580.[3] The more probable conclusion, therefore, is that the row of houses was thrown back about 1480, to give a view of Magdalen chapel and front gate, and that a low wall was made on the south side of the Gravel Walk, where the wall now is.

It is evident that the high road passed across the burial-ground of the Jews, and that in 1231 the Hospital received the portion which was on the north side of the road, while that which was on the south was retained by the Jews. If it seems strange that the same piece of land should serve as a road and also as a cemetery, it may be pointed out that it was so with several of the Oxford churches, notably St. Mildred's Church and St. Peter's in the East, burials having been found in Brasenose Lane and Queen's Lane. In 1293 the Hospital obtained this southern portion as well, and leaving a width of 26 feet for the road they obtained a strip measuring 64 feet by 300 feet as a cemetery for their own patients. When the road was enclosed in this way, the question arose whose duty it was to repair. In 1331 Edward III issued a writ to the bailiffs and commonalty of Oxford that they should make no claim on the Hospital to repair the road from Pettypont to 'the cross by the gate of the Hospital'.[4] Where this cross stood is uncertain. It will be seen in Appendix III that there was a stone cross opposite the west end of the chapel of St. John the Baptist, but as it seems to have stood within the walls of the Hospital, it is probable that the writ of the king refers to some other cross. Anthony Wood[1] assumes that it stood in 'East Gate Street before the door of St. John's Hospital' (i.e. where now is the gateway to the President's Lodging), but it may be noticed that the writ does not say ante portam but iuxta portam. The Ordnance Survey places the cross in an impossible position, in the narrow roadway opposite the so-called Pilgrim's Gate. Twyne, who copied the original deed in the Town Archives,[2] and from whom Dr. Langbane made his copy, has these words about the cross:[3] 'whether the cross was at the street gate of the Hospital or at a back gate, perhaps at the bounds of St. Cross's parish, we cannot tell.' That there was a cross at this spot, just within the boundary of Holywell parish, we know from our deeds (see vol. ii, pp. 359, 360), and it is mentioned in an extract that Twyne gives us[4] from a roll of presentments at a view of frankpledge, probably at the end of the fifteenth century: 'The road between the chain outside East Gate and the cross of Holywell is blocked with rubbish by Nicholas Mansyple.' We have no proof that there was a backway into the Hospital from Long Wall Street; but it may be pointed out that the gate which stood in East Bridge Street is described as 'the great gate' of the Hospital,[5] as though there was another gate elsewhere; and to this day there is an old doorway in the wall of Magdalen at the point where Holywell parish begins. There is no evidence to show who repaired this piece of road. Twyne copied from the Town Archives a writ of Edward the Black Prince to the mayor and bailiffs of Oxford that they should repair the road between East Bridge and Crowelle[6] (which was a pond at the north end of Long Wall Street), and a reply of the authorities of Oxford asking that the sheriff may hold an inquest to discover whose duty it is to repair this road, as it has never been the duty of the mayor and bailiffs.[1] As late as 1580 the matter was still in dispute.[2]

The dissolution of the Hospital seems to have taken place without much warning. Richard Vise was appointed master on May 18, 1442; five years later he obtained from the pope a dispensation to hold with his mastership any benefice with or without cure;[3] on December 4, 1451, the king granted to the Hospital the advowson of Horspath, which might be served by one of the brethren of the Hospital without the endowment of a vicarage or the distribution of alms to the poor parishioners.[4] Hitherto there is no indication that the Hospital was misgoverned; but on May 5, 1456, the king issued[5] a commission to Masters Luke Lancok and John Boteller, doctors of decrees, John Moreton, doctor of laws, William Godeyere, bachelor in either law, and John Wynterburn, bachelor in laws, to visit and survey the Hospital of St. John, wherein by the negligence of masters divine service and works of piety have for no small time ceased, and whereof diverse possessions are withdrawn and wasted, and the chalices, books, vestments, and other ornaments sold by the masters; and to make inquisition touching the behaviour of masters, ministers, and farmers of their possessions. Of the commissioners we know that Lucas Lancok[6] was at one time president of Pekwater Inn, and from 1452 to 1453 rector of St. Michael's South; John Boteler[7] was principal of the School of Canon Law in Little Jewry in 1450; John Moreton[8] was head of the School of Civil Law in 1452; and William Godeyere was principal of White Hall in Cheyne Lane[9] about 1450; nothing is known of John Winterbourn. We cannot tell what was the result of the inquiry, but four months later there seems to have been no idea of suppressing the Hospital; for on September 27, 1456, the king granted permission[10] to the president and scholars of Magdalen Hall to acquire in mortmain lands that belonged to Oseney Abbey, St. Frideswide's, Littlemore Priory, University College, Oriel College, 'the prior and brethren of St. John the Baptist without the east gate', and the mayor and commonalty of Oxford. It seems probable that this grant in the first instance was issued with the view that Magdalen Hall might acquire the block of land between High Street and Merton Street, extending westward to Logic Lane or even farther,[1] the owners of this land being the bodies mentioned in the deed. But in a few days Bishop Waynflete was made chancellor of the realm, and within a month the scheme had been formed to dissolve the Hospital and to grant the site to Magdalen Hall; for on October 27, 1456, the king granted to William, bishop of Winchester, the patronage and advowson of the Hospital of St. John, and the master and brethren had licence to grant to Magdalen Hall all the possessions of the Hospital, including the site;[2] and if this letter be invalid, the chancellor shall issue another, without fine or fee. For some months there were negotiations between Richard Vise and the bishop;[3] and on July 5, 1457, the Hospital with its site and all its possessions was granted by the brethren to the authorities of Magdalen Hall by virtue of the deed of September 27, 1456. Thus the Hospital came to an end, and on August 20, 1457, the president of Magdalen Hall is in possession of the Hospital and on that day grants annual pensions of £10 to Robert Heyys, John Vobe, and John Sylam, priests,[4] three out of the four brethren who in addition to Richard Vise formed the staff of the Hospital at that time.[5] It is noteworthy that these grants bear the seal of the Hospital of St. John, which must by that time have been in the possession of John Hornley, president of Magdalen Hall. Another step was necessary, of which we have a trace in deed no. 970, namely to obtain the permission of the pope to suppress the Hospital. This was obtained on March 14, 1458, and the pope granted that Richard Vise, who already held the living of Faleghe or Fallay, might hold another with it, and each of the four brethren might hold a living.[1] One of them, John Vobe, held a chantry at Canterbury Cathedral which he resigned on September 22, 1459.[2]

Two references to the Hospital of St. John in its last years may be found in the Chancellor's Register.[3] The first is correctly printed in Munimenta Academica, ii. 669, but some words must be wanting in the original. The entry evidently states that on August 16, 1457, Richard Vise, late master of the Hospital of St. John, was banished from Oxford by the chancellor, because on the previous day, when he had been committed to the Castle prison 'for diverse transgressions of enormity', he left the prison without the leave of the chancellor. We do not know what his former offence was, but 'enormity' was used of such a mild offence as failing to appear in court when summoned. The other entry[4] states that on September 19, 1457, dom. Walter, brother of the Hospital of St. John, was convicted of carrying arms, bows and arrows; the chancellor ordered him to be cited, but it was certified that he had withdrawn from Oxford. We may assume that this refers to Walter Rede, who was one of the brethren when the Hospital was dissolved.[5] Perhaps it was because he was known to be a man of unstaid behaviour that no pension was assigned him in the previous month when the other brethren received pensions.[6]

After the extinction of the Hospital, the name occurs in the Chancellor's Register. William Ive, the vice-chancellor, held his court October 8, 1461, 'in collegio beate Marie Magdalene vulgariter nuncupato domus sancti Iohannis extra portam orientalem Oxonie';[7] on November 3, 1461, the spot is described as 'in ecclesia collegii sancte Marie Magdalene';[8] on December 2, 1461, it is 'in capella sancti Iohannis';[9] December 3, 'in domo sancti Iohannis Baptiste'.

One more reference to the Hospital has been found while this Preface was being printed. Twyne (vol. xxii, p. 335), giving some extracts from a lost cartulary of Abingdon Abbey, has the following note:

> E libro Abendone, qui in particulas dividitur. Particula quinta, carta 37. ‘Omnibus sancte matris ecclesie filiis, ad quos presens scriptum peruenerit, magister Edmundus de Abbendone salutem in domino. Nouerit uniuersitas uestra me concessisse et dedisse et hac presenti carta mea confirmasse deo et hospitali sancti Iohannis de Oxonia ad portam orientalem et fratribus ibidem commorantibus domum cum omnibus pertinentiis, que fuit Reginaldi Diuitis in vico West in villa de Abendone,’ &c.

Twyne adds that the deed which followed mentioned that magister Edmundus was afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, and no doubt it was the deed by which the Hospital of St. John granted the tenement to Abingdon Abbey. There was a chapel of St. Edmund, of which the remains are still to be seen in West St. Helen's Street, and our deed suggests that it was built on the site of the house of Reginald le Rich, father of Edmund. The land was given to the Hospital about 1220 or 1230, and probably alienated to the Abbey after the death of the donor.

At the conclusion of this work, the thanks of the members of the Oxford Historical Society should be conveyed to the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, who have defrayed the whole expense of this, the longest cartulary that the Society has published; and in particular to the Rev. H. A. Wilson, who has made many suggestions, and to Mr. R. T. Gunther, who has added in Appendix III a most valuable account of what is known about the buildings of the Hospital.

A CARTULARY OF THE HOSPITAL OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST

I. THE RULE OF THE HOSPITAL.

THE Rule of the Hospital, as far as is known, survives only in a paper MS., now Bodleian MS. Top. Oxon. d. 8, which contains five Papal Bulls or confirmations and a summary of some royal charters. It is in a hand of the middle of the fifteenth century, and the last entry shows that it cannot have been written before 1442. It was formerly in the Ashmolean, and the assumption that it was deposited there with the other MSS. of Anthony Wood is proved by a note of Wood, printed in Wood's City of Oxford (O.H.S.), ii. 528. He there states that he had in his possession (1) a copy of the Statutes of the Hospital of St. John; (2) a Roll of Inspeximus of several kings concerning its lands and foundation; (3) an abstract of certain gifts given in the time of Henry III. All these are now in the Bodleian; the copy of the Statutes is what is here printed; the Roll of Inspeximus is Bodleian Roll no. 23, being a copy of Henry V's charter (see charter 942); the 'abstract of certain gifts' is Bodleian Roll no. 24. We do not know how Wood obtained these records. In the account of the Hospital of St. John, which he wrote for his City of Oxford before he had seen the muniments of Magdalen, he makes no mention of these records; and the natural assumption is that they were subsequently given to him by the Bursar of Magdalen, probably when Wood obtained leave to inspect the charters of the College.

Si quis autem fratrum irracionabiliter quicquam petierit ab eodem, non spernendo eum contristetur; sed male petita cum humilitate denegabit; nulli se reddat difficilem. Sed si in sua possessione id quod ab eo petitur non habeat, bone responsionis sermo porrigatur, quia [1] sermo bonus super datum optimum; equo animo commissum sibi impleat officium. Horis competentibus que sunt distribuenda distribuat, ne in domo dei perturbetur aut contristetur aliquis.[2] Omni solicitudine curam gerat infirmorum pauperum, hospitum superuenientium.

De Sacrista.

Sacrista itaque sit unus de fratribus fidelis, in obsequio dei deuotus, chorum regens et ornans ecclesiam, in sua possessione habens ornamenta, libros, uestimenta et quecumque ad ecclesiam spectantia, percipiens redditus, oblationes et obuenciones ad ecclesiam spectantes et pauperum extraneorum in firmaria decedentium uestes et alia bona, si qua habuerint; debet idem sacrista libros et uestimenta seruare, reparare et renouare, ceram et oleum inuenire ad lampades ardentes in choro, firmaria et dormitorio. De receptis uero debet in fine anni magistro compotum reddere. Et quia eidem sacriste deputata est cura firmarie, statuimus et firmiter precipimus quod infirmorum admittendorum confessionem audiat priusquam admittantur, si fuerint adulti.[3] Non admittant leprosos, paraliticos, ydropicos, furiosos, morbo caduco laborantes, fistulas aut morbos incurabiles pacientes nec mulieres lasciuas pregnantes nec iuuenculas: sed pocius extra domum aliqua porcio sustentacionis eis assignetur, si indiguerint, cum infirmentur, quoadusque conualuerint.

De fratribus admittendis.

Statuimus quod de cetero nullus admittatur ad habitum ad instanciam quorumcumque nisi ipse ad minus per sex menses steterit in probatione. Peracto tempore probationis supradicte, et si magister et fratres illum approbant, admittantur [sic]. Statuimus eciam quod omnes fratres et sorores unusquisque habeat alium commendatum in orationibus suis, sacerdotes in missa, laici et sorores in oratione dominica. Et cum aliquis obierit fratrum siue sororum, quod omnes confratres sui sacerdotes deuote celebrent pro anima illa illo die siue in crastino et quod laici et sorores dicant pro illa anima psalterium beate uirginis, et quod ille mortuus habeat unum de confratribus suis celebrantem pro anima sua, et quod habeat corrodium suum illo anno, adeo integre sicut esset habiturus in uita; et cum dies anniuersarius suus fuerit singulis annis quod habeat plenum seruitium mortuorum cum aliis specialibus orationibus de omnibus fratribus et sororibus. Statuimus et prohibemus quod nullus ad ordinem seu ad confraternitatem admittatur irretitus uiciis incontinencie. Gulosi, ebriosi, luxuriosi, contenciosi, illiterati, persone deformes et defectum membrorum patientes, perpetue infirmitatis laborantes molestia incurabili, omnino repellantur, sed mites et humiles uiri timorati[1], in obsequio dei deuoti, admittantur ad habitum seu ad confraternitatem.

[1] The scribe writes 'quia . . . officium' as one clause.

[2] The scribe has begun a new sentence with 'Aliquis'.

[3] The scribe begins a new sentence with 'Si fuerint adulti'.

De obedientia fratrum.

Statuimus et statutum esse volumus quod omnes fratres et sorores sint obedientes suo preposito sine contradictione aliqua ita, cum aliquid a preposito imperatum fuerit, ac si diuinitus imperaretur. Moram pati nesciant[2] in faciendo, nec decet eos, qui nichil Cristo carius existimant, pro quo contempserunt uitam mundi propriamque uoluntatem, promittentes uiuere sub alieno arbitrio, et alieno iudicio se submittentes ac imperio, uerba Cristi in corde recolendo 'Non ueni facere voluntatem meam sed eius qui misit me'. Et tunc erit acceptabilis deo et dulcis hominibus, quia obediencia que maioribus prebetur deo exhibetur.

De Silentio.

Rara sit fratribus loquendi licencia, quia mors et uita in manibus lingue. Statuimus igitur quod post completorium fratres in dormitorio teneant silentium a tempore quo eunt cubitum usque ad primam cantatam in crastinum, & eciam in refectione teneant silentium. Loqui tamen et docere magistrum condecet. Tacere et audire discipulis conuenit. Et ideo, si qua loqui compellit necessitas, prius a preposito per signum loquendi cum omni humilitate requiratur licencia, ne quis plus loqui uideatur quam expedit. Scurilitatem uero et uerba ociosa que ad edificacionem non pertinent, sed pocius fratres ad iracundiam mouentia, in omnibus locis dampnamus, et ad huiusmodi uerba subditorum os aperire non permittimus.

De seruitio faciendo.

Statuimus eciam quod omnes fratres sani simul ad matutinas surgant ita tempestiue ut ante auroram uel saltem in aurora matutine possint percantari. Intrantes quidem primo ecclesiam, humiliter crucifixum debent adorare et coram autentico [sic] altari cum deuotione beate Marie uirginis maxime [sic]. Deinde stantes in stallis matutinas dicant de beata uirgine cum deuotione et consequenter de die; quibus inceptis et dictis usque ad ultimum uersum psalmi primi nullus deinceps frater chorum introeat, sed extra chorum permaneat expectans sue desidie culpam a suo preposito puniendam. Consequenterque prima et tertia percantatis, missa secundum ordinationem sacriste celebretur; qua celebrata cetere hore dicantur, et deinde fratres exeant et negotiis domus intendant, quilibet eorum prout competit officio sibi deputato.

De proprietate.

Ad hec autem superaddimus statuendo ne quis presumat aut aliquid dare aut accipere sine consensu et iussione sui prepositi, neque aliquid habere proprium, nullam omnino rem, quibus non licet nec sua corpora nec suam uoluntatem, in propria habere uoluntate. Omnia sint communia. Et si quisquam hoc nequissimo proprietarii uicio deprehensus fuerit, amonitus semel et iterum, si se non emendauerit graui subiaceat pene sibi infligende. Deinde si quod habuerit proprium, ante septem dies post promulgationem huius statuti illud resignet in manu sui prepositi in utilitatem domus conuertendum. Alioquin ab eodem septimo die ipso facto retentionis proprii fit excommunicatus. Si autem innotescerit [sic] aliquem cum proprietate obisse, corpus eius proiciatur extra sepulturam Cristianam et sepeliatur more asini in fimario[1], proiecto super eum eius proprio a fratribus dicentibus 'Pecunia tua tecum sit in perdicionem'.

De modo gerendi.

Omnes simul iaceant in uno dormitorio et de communi omnes cibentur et potentur in uno refectorio; omnes dormiant uestiti femoralibus et indumento quo utuntur loco camisie; nullus discurrat per uillas seu per patrias uel nemora sine comitatu et laudabili testimonio a suo licentiatus preposito. In uilla Oxonie nullus comedat siue bibat, nec ante fores sedeat ad aliquod spectaculum. Nullus ad decios[2] uel ad taxillos[3] ludat. Cum autem domum egredi contigerit, pallio utatur aut cappa.

De indumentis.

Induantur omnes russeto, cameleto uel[4] burneto, ita ut robe omnium sint concordantes. Unus nigram robam non habeat et alius albam. Cappas habeant cruce duplici ante pectus signatas. Similiter et mantella crucibus sint signata ante humerum ex parte sinistra.

De uita.

Casti sint omnes et sobrii, lasciuiam domantes, moderati in uictu, cum mulieribus non loquentes seu iocantes, recordantes semper quod mulierum contractus multos fecerunt errare sapientes. Qualibet ebdomada conueniant simul in capitulo et ibidem regulariter fratrum excessus a preposito corrigantur. Teneaturque capitulum absque garrulitate et clamore. Et qui deliquerint humiliter et obedienter canonicam subeant disciplinam. Nullus fratrem suum carnalem aut nepotem exhibeat. Plures fratres aut sorores non admittantur quam necessarii sunt ad seruiendum infirmis. Sorores conuerse uagas non teneant domicillas, sed si quas tenuerint arceantur ne discurrant in locis priuatis domorum aut gardinorum, per quod possit oriri infamia. Si quam familiam fratres habere contigerit, honesta sit, moderata, et casta. Si quis uero de familia ebriosus seu incontinens fuerit, nisi admonitus ab huiusmodi uiciis se subtraxerit, amoueatur. Veraces sint fratres sine iurgio, sine turpiloquio, sine maledicto. Qui maledixerit fratri suo sit ille maledictus, et qui benedixerit benedictionibus repleatur. Si quis fratrum super mendacio possit conuinci, graui pena plectetur. Similiter famuli mendaces a seruitio domus expellantur. Similiter et hi quos super furto conuinci contigerit. Fratres autem omnes et singuli qui in dicto hospitali habent obedientias, de bonis sibi commissis in fine anni reddant compotum suo preposito. Sorores conuerse, secundum quod competit sexui suo, obseruent ea que superius fratribus statuimus obseruanda. Hec nostra statuta seruantibus omnibus gracia et pax a deo multiplicetur in terris ita quod regnum eterne beatitudinis possideant sine fine; contempnentes et contradicentes maledictionis dei et beate Marie uirginis et omnium sanctorum incurrant sentenciam. Amen.

II. THE PROPERTIES OF THE HOSPITAL IN 1246.

On Aug. 25, 1246, King Henry III confirmed to the Hospital its possessions in Oxfordshire, in Buckinghamshire, in Warwickshire, and in the town of Oxford, and the deed survives on the Charter Roll of 30 Hen. III;[1] that portion of it which deals with the properties in Oxford is here reproduced. After each entry is given in square brackets the page where the original charter of the property may be found in the previous volumes. As only two of the charters are missing (and one of them survives in the Cartulary), it is evident that the muniments of the Hospital of St. John are nearly complete.

Besides the Charter Roll, we have Bodleian Roll no. 24, which gives us the latter half of the list. It is in a hand of the middle of the thirteenth century, and was probably made in 1246 with a view to the king's confirmation. One membrane, containing properties I to XLVIII, is lost, our membrane beginning with number XLIX, but it is noticeable that according to the list on the Charter Roll, the entry which the Bodleian Roll numbers as XLIX is the fiftieth entry. The Bodleian Roll is of use in several places where the Charter Roll is illegible.

It has already been pointed out (see p. 1) that this Roll was at one time in the possession of Anthony Wood, and it bears on the margin some notes in his handwriting.

III. A COMPUTUS ROLL OF 1340.

None of the computus rolls of the Hospital survive except the following fragment. It is one roll, but the writing begins at each end, and it appears that the first part contains the expenses for shoes for the brethren from Jan. 18 to Sept. 21, 1340, with the farming expenses on the back; and the second part, which begins at the other end of the roll, runs from Sept. 21, 1340, to Sept. 21, 1341, and gives the servants' wages (£8 8*s.*), the payment of rents (£5 0*s.* 5*d.*), and the 'necessary expenses' (£22 19*s.* 1¼*d.*). The roll is in bad condition and badly written, and part of it is illegible.

The first account shows that, besides the Master and Nicholas the Clerk, the Hospital contained nine members, eight of whom are styled brethren; there is no mention here of the number of the sisters; but as the next account records that 16*d.* was paid at Easter for gloves for the brethren and the sisters, it is probable that the House contained sixteen members in all, apart from the Master. There were also the 'free servants', as they would then have been called, Nicholas the Clerk, who went to London for writs, John Gay, and Adam the Writer; and the domestic servants, a carpenter, 'sclatters', a carter, a baker, and, if the roll were legible, we should probably find that there was a washerwoman and a dairy-woman. These all received board, lodging, and perhaps clothing, and a small wage besides. The 'oblations of the servants' at Christmas cost 4*s.* 6*d.*, and the same amount was paid at Easter for 'offertories', but it is hard to believe that the servants were fifty-four in number.

On the back of the first account are the expenses of the harvest of 1340, for the Hospital farmed the adjacent land. The mowing of Parys Mead cost 12*d.*, of Cowlake 5*s.* 6*d.*, of Cowlese 7*s.*, of King's Mead 4*s.* 6*d.*, of Cowelake Rowayn 4*s.*; and the reaping of the corn, grown probably where the Grove now is, was done by forty hired labourers in three and a half days.

The most noteworthy expenses of the year are £1 paid to Mag. William de Stafford, a local doctor, for healing the hand of Brother Thomas de Kylmesham; 12*s.* for making a fishpond; 5*d.* for collars for the swans; and various expenses for making a new missal for the chapel, more than 16*s.* being spent on what is called parchment velym or parchment, while ink, vermilion, and azure were purchased. There is no payment to the writer, and we may assume that it was done by Adam Scriptor, one of the servants of the Hospital.

[1] Henry Simeon had a rent of two shillings from domus Wareyn (see ii. 213) and 16*d.* from the adjacent tenement (see ii. 216). These rents descended to John de Brehull and ultimately to John de Northampton (see ii. 220).

[2] A rent paid at the Castle would be a rent paid to the sheriff; probably Goseholt was not in Oxford but somewhere in the county.

[3] The quitrent from Hore's tenement was originally eight shillings (see ii. 56 and the rental of 1328). In this year fourteen shillings were paid.

[4] The rental of 1328 says this was due for the meadow called Cowlake.

[5] There was a quitrent of 12*d.* a year due to Eynsham from Granger's tenement (see ii. 234).

[6] A rent of 5*s.* 8*d.* was due to St. Frideswide's from Swinbrook's (see ii. 46). Of this sum 8*d.* was due to the light of St. Lucy (see Cart. St. Frid. i. 291).

[7] For the rent due to Coldnorton Priory see i. 451, 452.

[8] The rental of 1328 says that there was a rent of five shillings due from this tenement to Godstow; probably the figure here should be 15*d.*, which would be a quarter's rent, and would make the total tally with the items.

[9] The rental of 1328 says that there was a rent of nine pence due from this tenement to Godstow.

[10] Another name for Hore's tenement which has been mentioned already.

[11] The rental of 1328 records a rent of three shillings payable to the heirs of Walter Aurifaber 'pro prato Pille'.

[1] The rental of 1328 states that this rent was due from St. Mildred's Hall, afterwards known as Deep Hall.

[2] The rental of 1339 shows that Simon of Gloucester was the tenant of Swinbrook's, in All Saints, from which there was a rent of five shillings a year due to St. Frideswide's.

[3] The Hospital paid to Abingdon a rent of 12*d.* a year from a house in St. Aldate's (see ii. 153).

[4] This total is correct, if the conjectural figures within square brackets are accepted.

[5] The Town Crier.

[6] Probably a barge or punt.

IV. RENTALS OF THE HOSPITAL.

It is fortunate that many rentals of the Hospital survive, and for the period that they cover they are of much value for giving the names of the tenants, the variations of rent, and also to some extent the situation of the tenements; for the rentals occasionally give notes which show where the tenements were.

A mediaeval rental was a list of what the tenants ought to pay, not a list of what was actually paid, and it was drawn up at the beginning of the year, not at the end. Consequently a rental that is dated Michaelmas, 1360, would give the tenants and the rents for the year ending Michaelmas, 1361, not Michaelmas, 1360. Many of these rentals have rough notes of the amounts which were collected, but they are not worth printing; sometimes more was received than was due for the year, because the rent had been in arrears, but generally less than was due; for in the Mediaeval Ages bad debts were common.

In many of the rentals, as also in the rentals of Oseney Abbey, the entries are marked either with A. or F.; these letters stand for annualis redditus and feodum respectively, the latter word being used in the sense of a fee or fixed payment. In some rentals, instead of placing F. before the entry, the scribe adds libere at the end, or tenet libere, showing that the freehold belonged to the tenant, not to the Hospital, and that the rent was what we should call a quitrent. In a few cases the scribe makes a mistake when he deals with a tenement held on lease at a fixed rent, and puts F. before the entry instead of A.; but such cases are evidently errors.

The method of the Hospital of St. John, unlike the method of Oseney, was to group the domus clericorum at the end of each parish or at the end of the whole roll. These are either Schools or Academic Halls, which were let by a peculiar tenure, on the one hand the tenant being bound to produce some security for his rent, and on the other hand the landlord being bound to perform all necessary repairs as soon as notice was given to him; if he was dilatory, the tenant might carry out the repairs and deduct the cost when he next paid his rent. There was also the peculiarity that, if the tenant and landlord could not agree what was a fair rent, the matter was settled by four taxatores or assessors, two from the Town and two from the University, and their decision was to hold good for five years.

In the rentals from 1385 to 1394 we have some interesting information about the letting of houses; for the tenants are divided into those who hold per annum, and those who hold per indenturam or ad terminum. We learn that in the majority of cases a house was not let by lease or indenture but by an agreement for a year; we do not know how much notice had to be given by either side if the agreement was to be terminated.

Both from the rentals of the Hospital and from the rentals of Oseney we learn that there was a steady dwindling of the population of Oxford down to the reign of Queen Mary or Elizabeth, and a steady decline in the rent of houses. In the next section of this volume, where we give the Fine Books of the College, an attempt is made to trace the rise and fall in the values of houses from the beginning of the fourteenth century to modern times by taking certain instances of which we have full records; but in this section we will deal with only the period from 1300 to 1500 and notice the total of the rental from year to year. In 1293 the Oxford rents of the Hospital produced £129 1*s.* 9*d.*; the following table shows how this total decreased:—

These figures are only approximate, for in some cases the clerk has forgotten to enter the amount of rent due from a tenement and an estimate has to be made from previous or following rentals, but this can affect the total of a rental by only a few shillings. It will be observed that there was a drop in rents between 1293 and 1325, some portion of which was recovered in 1346. In 1349 came the Black Death and for a year or two there was chaos, and even seven years later the rental was barely half what it had been in 1346. There was a steady improvement in 1366, 1376, and 1384. Then for ten years there is little change; but in 1426 there is a fall, and in 1478, which is the date of the next rental, the total is little more than half what it was in 1293. And in reality the figures are worse than they appear, as the Hospital had been acquiring new properties all the time and parting with none. The following is a list of the tenements acquired by the Hospital between 1300 and 1489, with their approximate values, and it is probable that there are others of which we have no records :—

According to this estimate the rental should have increased about £14 between 1300 and 1489, and this estimate is under the mark, if we may trust the evidence supplied by two lay subsidies or tenths collected in Oxford in 1383 and 1418.[1] It must be explained that in 1291 an ecclesiastical taxation was made throughout England, and lands and houses which were held at that date by ecclesiastical houses paid for the future to ecclesiastical, not to lay subsidies, but whatever a religious house acquired after 1291 paid its due to lay subsidies. In 1334 a new step was taken, and from that date the assessment or valuation of a town did not alter. In collecting a tenth in Oxford the method was to demand first of all a tenth from the endowed chantries, all of which were founded after the thirteenth century, and then from the Colleges and from the monastic houses as far as they had acquired tenements since 1291, the date of Taxation of Pope Nicholas. Now in 1383, when half a tenth was being collected, there are two entries about the Hospital of St. John :

De magistro et fratribus S. Iohannis, Oxon, de antiqua 26*s.* 0*d.*'

[1] Twyne iv. 180 and xxiii. 435.

This seems to mean that in 1334 the Hospital was reckoned to have acquired, subsequently to 1291, lands and tenements in Oxford to the yearly value of £26, and those acquired between 1334 and 1383 were reckoned to be of the yearly value of £9 5*s*. These figures are much higher than those in our list, but it must be remembered that the estimate for the taxation runs from 1291 and ours from 1300, and that in the year 1293 alone the Hospital received Swinbrook's (ii. 47), Punchard's (i. 318), and Bodin's houses (ii. 322), which are reckoned to be worth about £9 10*s*. in the rentals of the beginning of the reign of Edward III. The estimates therefore are not utterly inconsistent. In 1418 the estimate was reduced and the acquisitions of the Hospital since 1291 were reckoned to be worth £30 a year, in other words, about a third of the rental of the Hospital at that time. We may therefore reckon that out of the total of £70 in the rental of 1478, quite £20 represents acquisitions made after the year 1293, and the real fall in prices between those two dates is represented by the figures 129 and 47.

The rentals supply other evidence of the continual decay of Oxford in the many tenements which sank to be gardens and finally were absorbed by their neighbours. This naturally occurred not so much in the main streets as in the corners of the town, the north-east and the south-east corners in particular. Before the Black Death the site of New College was becoming depopulated, and four Academic Halls, bordering the churchyard of St. Peter's, mentioned in the rental of 1293, are gardens in the next rental; but the Black Death hastened the decay, and the rentals show that in the south-east corner of the town a dozen cottages or more, the property of the Hospital, lying in Merton Street, Harehall Lane, and facing the city walls, became waste ground, and the site was not occupied again by buildings until the reign of Charles II. George Street (Irishman Street), the north side of which was occupied by houses in the thirteenth century, was deserted even before 1349 and became a piece of waste ground and was called Brokenhayes, perhaps from the fragments of hedges which marked the old sites. Even in High Street near the East Gate some of the tenements ceased to be occupied in the time of Henry VII and Henry VIII, e.g. White Hall (i. 315), when in addition to the Plague, which never died out, there was the visitation of the Sweating Sickness.

Notice should also be taken of the tenements which pass from the F. class to the A. class without any deed of gift to explain the change; for they are an indication of the decay of Oxford. In such cases the solution is that as rents and values fell, in time the owner of a house who had to pay a large quitrent found that it was cheaper to allow his house to be forfeited to the Hospital than to pay his quitrent. We have an instance where a house passed through this stage twice (ii. 100–105), having about 1320 lapsed to the Hospital for non-payment of the quitrent, and again in 1367 after it had been let at a lesser quitrent.

The houses in the rental are strictly in geographical order, and we can trace the course of the rent-collector as he went round each parish. It was his rule to collect one side of the street at a time, and not to cross from side to side. His arithmetic is so often at fault that no attempt has been made to correct it.

Some interesting light is thrown on familiar names in these rentals, for some rent-collectors described the tenants by the names that were used in daily talk. Thus a tenant near Carfax in the rentals of 1367 to 1376 is called Bartole, Bartele, Bartolot, and Bartelot; finally in 1385 his correct name is given, viz. Bartholomew the Taverner, but in daily life he was probably known as Bartle or Bartlot. Again, the Cesse Shapster of 1371 becomes Cecilia Spinster in 1374 and Cessota Shapster in 1375; so that her familiar name was Cesse or Cessot.[1] The Marieria Taylour of 1371 is the Magota Taylour of 1374 and the Marioria Taylour of 1394. Her name Margaret or Margery[2] was shortened to Mag, and then as Emma makes Emmota and Maria makes Mariota, so Mag makes Magota. In the rental of 1293 Edecus Lotrix, unless the name is an error of the scribe, is a form of Edith, as the next rental shows, and Bele Lotrix of 1293 is Isabella in the subsequent rolls. In 1325 we have the curious name Pulin the Barber which in 1328 is Ipolitus Barbitonsor; apparently the name was shortened to Pul and the termination -in, which appears in Janyn, Huggin, &c., was added. That Pernell and Petronilla are identical is proved by the rentals of 1351 and 1356, if it needs proof.

The rental of 1426 when compared with the preceding rental shows that in the last thirty years the Hospital had lost, or more probably sold, several small quitrents, especially in St. Martin's parish; there is no record that gives any explanation of it.

1. A rental of 1287–1293.

The first rental is a fragment, both the beginning and the end of the roll being wanting. The beginning would have recorded the tenements outside East Gate, also those in High Street within East Gate on the north and the south sides, and the rents 'contra muros uille uersus Kybaldstret', as the phrase is in the next rental, i.e. the rents in what is now King Street, running from High Street to the east end of Merton Street, and in the east part of Kibald Street. The remainder of St. Peter's parish and St. Mary's and All Saints in full are given, but the rest is missing.

The date must be after 1285 because there is mention of domus Swinbrook, which was not acquired until that year (see ii. 44), and after 1287 when domus Canis in the parish of St. Peter in the East was given to the

[1] This explains the name William Cusseblancpain which occurs in the Cartulary of St. Frideswide (i. 101) and in Oseney deeds; it is William, son of Cecilia Blancpain.

[1] See ii. 37.

[2] This refers to domus Swinbroc; this is certain, for the Hospital received from the house of Hugh le Hore nothing but a quitrent of 28*s*.

2. A rental of 1293 or 1294.

Down to the year 1359 no rental states when the year was reckoned to begin; from 1359 to 1367 the date is either Sept. 21 or Sept. 29, but subsequently Dec. 21. If the heading of the roll for 1293 is accurate, it is probable that it runs from Dec. 21, 1293, to Dec. 21, 1294; for the date is 'anno xxii incipiente', and the years of Edward I begin on Nov. 20. On the other hand, the heading of the rentals of 1371, 1374, &c., show that incipiente was supposed to agree with rentale; in which case this rental might be of Michaelmas 1294.

On the back of the roll is the list of redditus resoluti which is found on the roll of 1328 and printed there. It is in the same hand, but not the same ink, as the face of the roll, and may be a few years later. The roll has been much altered and erased, and probably by means of corrections was made to serve for several years.

8. A rental of 1351.

Although when this rental was made it was two years from the outbreak of the Plague, yet many traces of that calamity may be noticed. In the first place the rents were very low, and in the second place many of the tenements, in particular the Halls, were vacant and could not be let. In five cases we have the entry 'Mayr Oxon tenet', which might be taken to mean that the mayor, in virtue of his office, was the occupant of the tenement, either as guardian of a minor or as trustee until the true owner was found. But in all probability it is not so; the mayor in this year was John de Bereford, and the following rentals show that in the case of three out of the five tenements he continued to be the tenant after he had ceased to hold the office of mayor.

[1] The rent of this tenement was usually about fifty shillings, but it was probably being rebuilt this year, as the next rental shows a new arrangement of houses at this spot.

[2] Possibly a name for Littlegate or Watergate, the gate in the Town Walls below St. Ebbe's church. No doubt the Preaching Friars had a gate of their own further south where the road crossed Trill Mill, but such a gate would not be so near the tenement in question.

[1] The rental shows that many of the smaller halls were unoccupied this year, and those that were occupied paid a low rent. It was a time of dearth as we learn from the register of Bishop Brantyngham, Bishop of Exeter, who on June 20, 1370, granted ten shillings from the common chest to each of the Fellows of Exeter College, as they were unable to live on their allowance, and on November 13 granted an addition of fourpence a week to the weekly allowance, to be continued for the next forty weeks. (Registrum Coll. Exon. O.H.S. p. lv.)

---

[1] 'Iohanna Kedwelly' in the previous rental.

36. A rental of 1395, 1396, or 1397.

The date at the head of the following roll is illegible, but it is certainly subsequent to 1391, for in that year the Domus Charnel was still a garden, whereas in this rental, as in the rentals of 1392, 1393, and 1394, it has been rebuilt as three shops. It is earlier than Michaelmas 1398; for the house in the parish of St. Clement, once occupied by John Pydington, is not yet occupied by John of the Chamber (see vol. i, p. 7). This rental is valuable, as it divides the leases into two classes, cum reparacione and sine reparacione.

39. A rental of 1452–4.

The next rental is without heading and is a rough draft and imperfect, written on paper. The entries which deal with Bostar Hall and the adjacent halls show that its date must be between 1448 and 1457, while the first Magdalen Hall was in existence. It must be earlier than Dec. 20, 1454 (see vol. i, p. 361); on the other hand it cannot be earlier than Michaelmas 1452, because among the tenants in St. Mary's parish occurs the name 'Clark, alderman'; he was alderman in 1454, but it is known that he was not alderman in 1448, 1449, 1450, and 1451; the aldermen for 1452 and 1453 are at present unknown.

For the years 1 Ric. III, 3 Ric. III, 1 Hen. VII, and 8 Hen. VII the Computus gives no details of the rents, but after mentioning what the total should be it gives the resoluciones and the defectus redditus.

The resoluciones are the same in each of these years, viz. 2*s.* 6*d.* from 'le Doubull Key' outside North Gate,[1] paid to William Herle 'armiger'; 8*d.* to the proctors of the church of St. Michael North from the tenement inhabited by John Colet;[2] 13*d.* to the bailiff of Northgate Hundred for suit of court; 2*s.* 4*d.* to the Chamberlain of the Town;[3] 10*s.* to William Barantyne[4] for Great Mead; 1*s.* 6*d.* to the Abbot of Abingdon from a tenement and garden in Pennyfarthing Street occupied by John Fermer; 13*s.* 4*d.* to the King's College from a tenement called le Tabbard; 20*s.* to the manor of Sandford; 8*d.* to the warden of the church of St. Michael at North Gate from the tenement occupied by Stephen Glover;[5] 6*s.* 8*d.* to the Provost of Queen's College from a tenement called le Belle;[6] 10*s.* to the Master of the Rolls for converted Jews; 7½*d.* to the bailiffs of Oxford for landgable. Total, £3 9*s.* 4½*d.*

The defectus redditus in 1 Ric. III amounted to £12 5*s.* 2*d.*; no rent was received from the first four tenements next to the Great Gate of the College because they had been made into the Grammar School; the tenement next to the Grammar School 'stetit uacua per iii anni terminos, causa noue edificacionis'; the three selds outside East Gate paid no rent 'quia non edificantur et steterunt desolate per plures annos'; the shop at Carfax late in the tenure of Stephen Glover is 'in decasu, quam Prior sancte Frideswide erigere, exaltare, reparare et construere tenetur';[7] 'item in defectu redditus unius magni prati uocati le Gretmede, quia superundatur annuatim cum aquis, unde male herbe uocate Flagges et alie herbe nociue ibidem accreuerunt et pratum predictum fere destruxerunt'. The redditus negati were 20*s.* from All Souls, 2*s.* from Exeter College (i.e. for St. William Hall), 10*s.* from Thomas Durest for Kingston's Entry, and 6*s.* 8*d.* from Edward Atwode (= Woodward) from his tenement in St. Martin's.

In 3 Ric. III the defectus redditus were £11 12*s.* 8*d.*; the first five houses next to the gate of the College, including the tenement of Robert Baron, were now The Grammar School, and all the houses as far as the corner, except the house of Thomas Adderbery, had been vacant part of the year 'causa noue edificationis'; the tenements of Karon, Grey, and Blake had been thrown into one. Aristotle Hall was vacant the whole year. The repairs were £30 18*s.* 3*d.*; the redditus negati £2 8*s.* 8*d.*; the resoluciones £3 9*s.* 4½*d.*; and as the redditus assise were £74 7*s.* 8*d.* the clear amount received by the College was only £25 18*s.* 8½*d.*

[1] The rental of 1480 shows that the Double Key was no. 4, Magdalen Street; apparently William Herle was lord of Northgate Hundred.

[2] This occurs in each of the four years, but it does not occur in 1511 or subsequently. The rentals do not mention John Colet. It is distinct from the quitrent paid to the churchwardens, which occurs below.

[3] i.e. two shillings for Harehall Lane and 4*d.* for the Racke in Grampound.

[4] Lord of the manor of Chalgrove.

[5] i.e. no. 43, Cornmarket.

[6] See vol. i, p. 287.

[7] See vol. ii, p. 79.

In 8 Hen. VII the defectus redditus were £8 2*s.* 6*d.* from houses which were vacant 'because no one was willing to hire them'.

Summa totalis lxxvii li. iiii s. i d.

The resoluciones are: 2*s.* to William Erley, Esq., for a tenement without North Gate called Le Dobulle Key; 8*d.* from the tenement of Nich. Postlett, skinner, to the proctors of the church of St. Michael North; 13*d.* to the bailiff of Northgate Hundred for releasing suit of court; 18*d.* to the abbot of Abingdon from a tenement in Pennyfarthing Street; 13*s.* 4*d.* to Oriel College for the hospice Le Tabard, now Le Aungell; 4*d.* to magister Wylks;[2] 7½*d.* to the bailiffs of the town for landgable;[3] 13*d.* to Master Darell at his manor of Chalgrove for a quitrent from Great Mead near the bridge; 8*d.* to the churchwardens of St. Aldate's from a house in the tenure of John Baker;[4] 2*s.* 4*d.* to the chamberlains of the City.[5]

---

[1] The site of Hertheved Hall.

[2] Probably a bursar of New College; in later years the rent was paid to the Warden of New College; it was due from a tenement in Coach and Horses Lane.

[3] In earlier times it was 8½*d.*

[4] i.e. on the south side of St. Aldate's churchyard.

[5] Probably 2*s.* for Harehall Lane and 4*d.* for the Rack in St. Michael's South; after 1515 only 2*s.* is paid.

The following quitrents had not been paid for the previous five years; 10*d.* from the house of Henry Hudson; £1 from Physick Hall; 7*s.* 6*d.* from Edgecombe's garden in St. Mary's; 10*s.* for Kingston's Entry, the rent being denied by John Bishop; 13*s.* 4*d.* from Goodyere's house; 2*s.* from Wilby Hall; 2*s.* 4*d.* from a house in St. Giles's in the tenure of Jeamus; 1*s.* from a tenement of Godstow there; 13*s.* 4*d.* from a tenement in the Hamell; 12*s.* from the Swan; 13*d.* from a garden opposite the school of Civil Law, withheld by Balliol; and 'iiii s. de quieto redditu de quodam gardino [1] prope aulam Vitream nuper in tenura collegii Mertonis; iiii s. de quadam aula [2] iuxta collegium Animarum'.

V. FINE BOOKS.

Until less than fifty years ago the method under which Magdalen College and the other Colleges let their houses and lands was by 'beneficial leases renewable by a fine', to use the technical term; and although it is still retained to some extent by one College,[1] yet it has been so generally discarded and is so rapidly becoming part of ancient history, that it is unfamiliar even to many College Bursars, and for the sake of the general reader it must be described with some fullness, if the Lease Books and Fine Books of the College are to be understood.

By the beginning of the nineteenth century, when this method had been reduced to a fixed system, the procedure was as follows. Houses in Oxford were for the most part let for a term of 40 years, a longer period being illegal; when 14 years of the period had expired, the tenant brought his lease to the College, surrendered it, and in consideration of a payment of a sum of money received a new lease for 40 years drawn up in the same terms as the previous lease. The custom at Magdalen in later times was to renew leases only on Aug. 6 and Dec. 6, but it was not so originally, nor was it so with other Colleges. The money paid for the new lease was called 'a fine', the word being used not in its modern sense of a penalty, but in its mediaeval sense of a payment in settlement of a dispute or of a bargain. If the value of the property increased, the fine increased, but the rent was not altered, and many tenements in Oxford paid the same rent in 1850 as in 1550. This was not the case at Magdalen, for it will be noticed in the leases that about the years 1812–15 the College gave notice to the tenants that the rents would be increased tenfold or more, and before 1850 these increases were in force; but even so, the rents were small in proportion to the value of the houses and remained at a fixed amount, while the fine varied as the value of houses in Oxford rose or fell. The fine was called an 'arbitrary' fine, and so it was legally, but in practice many College tenants could tell what their fine would be when their lease was renewed; for a custom arose that the fine should bear some proportion to the rack-rent of the house. At Magdalen the rule at the beginning of the nineteenth century was that, if a lease of 40 years was surrendered when 14 years had expired, the fine for renewal would be 1¼ years' rack-rent;[1] but each College had its own rule, and during the nineteenth century most Colleges raised the fine to 1½ years' rack-rent or even 1¾ years.[2] Probably for this there were two reasons; in the first place money was cheaper in the nineteenth century than in the eighteenth, and if a tenant borrowed money to pay his fine, he could get the money on easier terms in the nineteenth century; in other words he could afford to pay a larger fine. And a second reason may be that as the science of building improved, the cost of repairs decreased; for, as will be shown hereafter, the cost of repairs in the Middle Ages was high, being about 40 per cent. of the rent, but in modern times 25 per cent. would be a sufficient allowance, and as the tenant who took the lease undertook the repairs of every kind, his profits were greater as the skill of builders increased, and in consequence his fine was raised.

[1] St. John's College.

Though it might be well known that the fine at the end of 14 years should be 1¼ or 1½ years' rack-rent, there still remained an uncertainty in some cases; for where the tenant lived in the house he leased, there might be a dispute what its rack-rent would be, if it were let in that way. The valuer of the landlord settled the matter, and there was no appeal from his decision; if the valuation was too high, the tenant could do no more than refuse to renew his lease;[3] but as Colleges were anxious to secure the fines for the renewal of leases, it was not their policy to make the terms too onerous. In many cases there was no need for a valuation, as the rack-rent was well known. Take, for instance, the case of the Angel, of which the Bishop of Chester had a lease in 1694.[4] It need hardly be said that the Bishop did not reside there, but he let it at a yearly rent to an under-tenant; and this was the case with the majority of leases. The tenant who took the lease became an under-landlord and secured an under-tenant, who held under him either by a lease for a term of years or by a yearly agreement. In such cases the rack-rent was known, and it could be reckoned beforehand what the fine would be.

At first sight it seems that the College made a bad bargain, if every fourteen years it received beyond the small annual rent nothing but

[1] To speak accurately it was not the whole rack-rent, but that which remained after the rent due to the College had been paid. Thus if the rack-rent was £21, and the rent to the College was £1, the fine would be £25.

[2] Balliol College demanded 1 year's rack-rent in 1661 (Balliol Oxford Deeds, O. H. S., p. 345) and 1671 (ib. 341); 1¼ years' in 1761 (ib. 348), 1½ years' in 1777 (ib. 346), 1803 (ib. 228), and 1820 (ib. 349); 1¾ years' in 1832 (ib. 349), 1844 (ib. 351), and 1846 (ib. 211).

[3] For an instance see Balliol Oxford Deeds, p. 353.

[4] See vol. i, p. 185.

$1\frac{1}{4}$ years' rack-rent, while the tenant took the rent for $12\frac{3}{4}$ years; but the bargain is not quite as bad as it seems. As an instance we may take the Magdalen tenement in All Saints parish through which the Wheatsheaf Passage runs. The rent was £2, and in 1801, as we learn from the Survey of 1791 which is printed in this volume, it was valued at £45; the fine therefore was $\frac{5}{4}\times\pounds 43=\pounds 53$ 15*s*. Now in 1801 the choice before the College was whether for the next 26 years the College would be content with a rent of £2 a year and at the end of that time come into possession of a house which could be let at a rent of £45, or renew the lease and take a fine of £53 15*s*. and another fine in fourteen years' time. If the fine of £53 15*s*. were invested at 5 per cent. compound interest it would amount at the end of 26 years to something more than £150; and a similar fine fourteen years later, if invested for twelve years, would be something less than £100; say the two together would be £250. If, therefore, the College had taken the fines, and invested them instead of spending them, it would at the end of 26 years have had an income of £12 10*s*. a year; by refusing to renew the lease it would in the same number of years be in possession of a house that could be let for £45. From this amount perhaps £12 must be deducted for annual repairs, and something for bad debts, and for the cost of collecting the rent, leaving a net income of £25. It appears, therefore, that a fine set at $1\frac{1}{4}$ years' rack-rent was too easy a bargain for the tenant, but that if he had been charged two years' rent, the arrangement would have been fair to both sides.

The system of letting houses at a low rent with a lease renewable by a fine was not peculiar to Colleges, but it was more general with them than with private owners. Its advantages were many. The College had no trouble about repairs, and it was unnecessary to keep what is now called an Estates Bursar; and there were no bad debts, for as the tenant had paid a fine that he might enjoy the tenement for many years, he would not be so foolish as to withhold his rent and forfeit his lease. The tenant had a lease of such length that it was his best policy to improve his house that he might get a higher rent during his term of forty years; but there was this drawback, that if a man raised the value of the house, his next fine would be higher. But the Fine Books show that in many cases the College granted a lenient fine to a tenant who had improved the College property. The weak point of the system is that it was defrauding posterity; the fine was in reality the rent which the next generation ought to receive, but much reduced on consideration of the fact that it was paid many years before it was due. Private persons, who owned property, in many cases let their leases run out that their children might be better off, but Colleges in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries had little care for those who were to come.

It is obvious that as a lease drew near its end, the fine for renewal would rise rapidly. If the fine was 1¼ years' rack-rent when one-third of the lease had expired, the fine would be nearly five years' rack-rent when two-thirds had expired. In the Fine Book we see that the fine for Howell's Yard (see vol. i, p. 334) was £13 15*s.* in 1754, when 14 years of the lease had expired, but in 1790 when 36 years were expired the fine was £132. It will be noticed that in the seventeenth century the leases were often renewed at varying intervals; in some cases less than 14 years had passed, in some cases more, and of course the fine varied accordingly. But in process of time it became customary to renew regularly every 14 years; and sometimes in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries if the lease was renewed when more than 14 years had elapsed, the new lease was antedated and began from the end of the 14 years, and the fine paid was the fine due for a renewal at the end of 14 years, although no doubt the tenant had to pay interest on the money for the years that it was overdue.

The system of beneficial leases produced a curious double ownership in houses; one party owned the freehold and another party owned the lease, and in many cases the lease was much more valuable than the freehold. In 1803 it was reckoned in the case of a house in the parish of St. Mary Magdalen that a lease with 27 years to run was more than twice as valuable as the owner's share of the house.[1] Sometimes the owner of the lease is described as the owner of the house, and in advertisements in Jackson's Oxford Journal cases may be found where a man advertises that he will sell what he calls his house, and only adds at the end 'held under — College at a rent of £1, by a lease renewable every 14 years'; often, too, in wills the testator speaks of 'my' house when in reality he only held a lease. It is easy to understand how this mode of speaking arose, when we notice that a lease might be held by members of one family for a hundred years or more; thus the White family held Ing Hall for more than a century (vol. i, p. 464). To buy one of these leases was a way of investing money, and though it was generally the case that the investor was resident in Oxford, and it was desirable that he should be near his house, yet sometimes he was of London or some more distant spot. In all these beneficial leases it is unsafe to assume that the tenant mentioned in the lease was the occupant of the house; in the majority of cases the house was underlet to some one who had not sufficient capital to buy a lease.

[1] Balliol Oxford Deeds, p. 227 (O. H. S.).

It is important to ascertain when this system began; but for the decision of this point the Lease Books and the Fine Books and the College Accounts give us no help. The earliest Fine Book begins about 1649, but it is certain that fines were paid before that time. It is useless to study the College Accounts, for only the rents are recorded there and not the fines, because the fines were what may be called the pocket-money of the Fellows, and did not contribute to the maintenance of the College. The leases give no help for the reason that, though the nineteenth century leases generally mention that a fine was paid and that the old lease was surrendered, it is not so in the eighteenth and the seventeenth centuries, each lease being a reproduction of the original lease, and were it not that we had other sources of knowledge we should assume that the lease before us was an ordinary lease for 40 years at the full value of the tenement. Under these circumstances it may be asked whether there is any proof that the system was not in use in the Middle Ages. It is true that fines are not mentioned in the mediaeval leases or mediaeval rentals, but, as we have seen, neither are they mentioned in post-mediaeval leases and rentals. Yet owing to the fact that the College rentals during the sixteenth century give the expense of repairs each year, we have evidence which shows when the system began. For, as long as the College rentals make mention of repairs, it cannot have been in full working, since the landlord was not responsible for repairs under the system of beneficial leases. In 1544 the repairs were £36 8*s.* 6½*d.*; in 1545, £31 9*s.* 9*d.*; in 1548, £39 2*s.* 8*d.*; in 1554, £39 1*s.* 10½*d.*; in 1561, £30 6*s.* 8*d.* Year after year in the reign of Henry VIII the repairs cost between £30 and £40 on a rental of somewhat less than £80. This may seem a large proportion of the receipts, but the accounts of Oseney Abbey show that the same proportion was paid by Oseney 60 years earlier; no doubt the bad building in the Middle Ages is responsible for the high cost. We may assume, therefore, from the figures given in 1561, that the system of beneficial leases had not begun at that date. But in 1569 the repairs fall to £26 4*s.* 5*d.*, in 1570 to £22 10*s.* 7*d.*, in 1581 to £8 5*s*. 3*d*., in 1586 to £1 9*s*. 7*d*., in 1591 to nil. The system, therefore, came into use between 1561 and 1591. Probably at first no fine was paid, but the tenant undertook that if a new lease was granted him he would pay the old rent and also be responsible for the repairs; and as the value of houses increased and he found that he had a good bargain, he would offer the College a fine if his lease might be extended on the same terms or a new lease granted him. The original form of the lease not only bound the tenant to perform all repairs, but also forbade him to alienate the lease without the licence of the College; but in later times it was the universal rule that when a new lease was issued, the tenant received another document called 'the licence', whereby he was allowed to alienate the lease. It might be thought that it would have been simpler to omit the clause in the lease whereby the tenant was forbidden to alienate; probably it was retained because an extra fee was paid to the Bursar or his clerk for issuing a 'licence'.

The end came in 1870. The College appointed a Committee 'to inquire into the expediency of terminating the practice of renewing leases on Fines', and the report was that 'Your Committee regard it as unquestionable that the substitution of the system of Rack-Rent leasing for the system of fines would result in a few years in a very large addition to the revenue of the College, and that independently of this gain, it would be highly desirable that the College should have the actual possession and management of its own estates. Funds for effecting the change of system must be provided by borrowing under the University and College Estates Acts, or by using for the purpose some of the funded property of the College.' This report was adopted at a College meeting held July 21, 1870, and at one stroke the College deprived itself for some years of nearly half its income. Between 1884 and 1891 the leases of the agricultural land of the College ran out, for by the Act of 13 Eliz. a lease of agricultural lands might not be for more than 21 years,[1] but the last lease of house property did not terminate until 1910. Meanwhile to meet current expenses the College had been obliged to raise loans, which it is said reached at one time the total of £250,000.

The records of the fines from 1649 to 1870, preserved at Magdalen in three small books, are worth printing because they show the rise, and in some cases the fall, in the value of houses during that period. When the system of beneficial leases was introduced, it was the fine and not the rent which showed what the house was worth; but unfortunately no College, as far as is known, has preserved a complete list of their fines, and the Fine Books at Magdalen are the best record we have. Of course it must be remembered that the fines were reckoned on different plans at different times, and the first thing is to discover the plan that was in use at Magdalen. The Rental and Survey of 1791, which is printed below, gives us the rack-rent or, as it was called, the improved rent of the tenements in 1791 and for the next twenty or thirty years, and when we refer to the Fine Books we are able to work out the method on which the fines were fixed during that period. From 1791 to 1808 or 1809 the method was to deduct from the improved rent the annual rent due to the College and to fix the fine at 1¼ of the remainder. Thus the improved rent of no. 43 Cornmarket in 1800 was £24; from this must be deducted the rent of £1 6*s.* 8*d.* due to the College, leaving £22 13*s.* 4*d.*; the fine therefore was $\frac{5}{4}$ × £22 13*s.* 4*d.* = £28 6*s.* 8*d.* In 1808 or 1809, when the College began to give notice that in 26 years' time the rents of the tenements would be raised, a new method was introduced; the tenant was allowed to deduct from the improved rent not the rent which he paid to the College, but the increased rent which in 26 years' time he would begin to pay, but in return the College raised the fine to 1½ of the sum remaining. At Balliol, as we have seen, a fine of 1¾ years' was taken from 1832 onwards, but at Magdalen there was no such rise; the proof of this is that if we take the fines from 1830 onwards and treat them as being 1½ times the improved rent, we obtain for the improved rent a round sum, but if we treat them as being 1¾ times the improved rent, we obtain an odd fraction of a penny. By the same method we discover that before 1791 the fine was 1¼ times the improved rent without deducting the annual rent to the College; but there is some uncertainty at what date the College passed from a fine of one year's rack-rent, which was the custom in the seventeenth century, to 1¼ years' rack-rent. The note in the Fine Book about the Angel (tenement no. 7) shows that 1¼ was the rule in 1765; and there is a similar note about tenement no. 16. It is probable that the change took place between August and December, 1754; for the fines from the latter date onwards are in a large number of cases a quarter more than the preceding fine, and though it is possible that in some cases the rack-rent had risen by precisely one quarter during the fourteen years, it is unlikely that that would be the exact rise in a large number of tenements. In a few cases the fines in leases after 1754 show no increase, but in these cases the Fine Book often gives the explanation that the tenant had improved his holding, in return for which it was the custom to abstain from raising his fine for the next 26 years, that is until he had had the advantage of his improvements for 40 years. There were other reasons why in certain cases the fine was set low; a widow was sometimes treated leniently, or a charitable body; this may be the explanation why the fine paid by the Feoffees of St. Michael's charities for no. 54 Cornmarket (tenement no. 70) in 1758, 1772, and 1786 was no greater (in fact it was less) than the fine in 1730 and 1744.

[1] See Enactments in Parl., vol. i, p. 176 (O. H. S.).

By means of the Rentals and Fine Books we are now in a position to show the fluctuations in the value of Oxford houses between 1293 and 1870. We have already shown that from 1293 there was a drop in values for the next fifty years; then in 1349 came the Black Death which increased the fall; afterwards there was a steady recovery for fifty years, though prices did not return to what they had been before 1349. From 1400 onwards to 1480 there was a continual fall, and from 1480 to 1560 things were at their worst. Probably a third of those years were years of Pestilence, and the Rentals of Magdalen College show that in many years a tenth of the houses belonging to the College were unoccupied. The period for which we have least evidence is the century from 1560 to 1660. We have seen that in 1560 the rents represent the true rack-rent at the time, of which the College kept about one-half, the rest being spent on repairs. By 1591 the College was responsible for no repairs, so that we may reckon that houses in 1591 were worth twice as much as in 1560. In reality the rise was rather more rapid; for in 1560 none of the houses were let on beneficial leases, while in 1591 the alteration had taken place in every case, and it is probable that by that date some of the tenants had begun to pay a fine for the renewal of their lease; so that the rise in values between 1560 and 1591 was probably about 2½. From 1591 for the next sixty years we have no evidence; between 1660 and 1690 there was a rapid rise, then for a century values were stationary; but after 1790 prices increased fourfold in forty years. From 1830 to the present time there has been little alteration; tenements in the side streets have decreased in value, no doubt owing to the fact that by the enclosure of the open fields in the neighbourhood of Oxford, there has been a provision of abundant sites for building; but in the main streets, especially near Carfax, prices continued to rise slightly and probably are still rising.

In showing the fluctuations of value by means of the following table, care has been taken to select those houses which have not been divided, or added to, since 1293, and have also been in continual occupation. It would not be fair to take tenements, like some in St. Ebbe's parish, which were uninhabited in the sixteenth century; nor would it be fair to take properties which were occupied as Halls in the Middle Ages; for the fact that Halls were held by a special tenure may have affected the rent at which they were let. Occasionally no doubt the rent or the fine of a tenement is unduly high or unduly low because of the state of repair of the buildings; but by giving as many as eight instances we can eliminate these exceptional causes.

This table does not give such a good idea of the fall in values between 1300 and 1500, as is obtained from the totals of the rentals year by year (see p. 29). For it was not the case that when the population of Oxford decreased, the rents of all the houses decreased. Those that were needed remained at much the same rent as ever, while those that were not needed were turned into gardens. And as the table we have printed deals only with houses that were continuously occupied, it conveys the idea that there was not much fall in values between 1300 and 1500. But as we have seen, when dealing with the rentals, the rateable value of Oxford in 1500 was less than half what it was in 1300, and probably only a third of what it was in 1250; there was an almost continuous decline for two and a half centuries, and the level at which rents stood in the days of Henry III was not reached again until the end of the reign of Elizabeth.

The following list of fines is made from three Fine Books now at Magdalen. All the columns, except the first, are copied from the originals, including the column headed Memoranda; the first column, giving the names of the tenements, is not in the originals. In a few cases the Fine Books reveal the existence of leases which were not copied into the Lease Books; and also in a few cases (e.g. in tenement 39) they assign to the lease a date different from that given in the Lease Book; in such cases the Fine Books are the better authority, for it was essential for the Fine Book to record how much of the lease had elapsed when it was renewed. On the other hand if the Lease Books and the Fine Books do not agree about the name of the tenant, the former is to be followed; for Fine Books were small note-books, somewhat carelessly kept, and the name of the tenant was not essential for their purpose. In some cases no name is given, and in some other cases, where the name has been filled up subsequently, it will be noticed by reference to the leases in the previous volumes that the name given is not the name of the man who paid the last fine, but the name of the man into whose tenure the tenement had passed.

VI. A SURVEY OR RENTAL OF 1791.

The following document is worth printing for the light it throws on the system of fines. It is a survey of the properties of Magdalen College in the town of Oxford, giving the rent of each tenement, and its improved rent, i. e. rack-rent, in 1791; and in many cases is added what the improved rent was reckoned to be in later years. By this means we are able to prove that the system of fines at Magdalen was such as is described in the previous section.

It was with peculiar pleasure that I received Mr. Salter's request to furnish some notes upon the Architecture of St. John's Hospital to form an Appendix to his final volume of the Cartulary, both because all available materials relating to the Hospital will thereby be brought together and because thus tardy justice will be done to the records and opinions of the two Bucklers, father and son, both of whom may be regarded as architectural pupils of Magdalen College, and whose love for her buildings is shown in the numerous excellent drawings which they made. Buckler senior came early in life to Magdalen to assist the Steward, Richard Fisher, brother to Colonel Fisher who, himself a most admirable draughtsman, encouraged Buckler to pursue his studies as an artist. President Routh very soon heard of Mr. Buckler's love for ancient buildings and his industry in studying and delineating them. He sent for him, became his patron, and continued all through life an attached friend, transferring these terms of intimacy to the son. Thus incidentally Colonel Fisher's encouragement laid the foundation of the Bucklers' reputation and success in life.

The father, John Buckler, F.S.A., was born at Calbourne, Isle of Wight, in 1770. On leaving Oxford he was articled for seven years to Mr. Cracklow, an architect in Southwark, and practised as a professional architect until 1826, when he retired in favour of his eldest son. From 1796 to 1849 he contributed water-colour drawings yearly to the Royal Academy, many of which were reproduced as aquatint engravings. He died in London in 1851. (D.N.B.)

His son, John Chessell Buckler, published several books of views of Churches and Schools between 1822 and 1866. His views were to a large extent worked up from his father's drawings. At Magdalen he is remembered as the author of an anonymous work upon the Architecture of the College, which no doubt also reflected his father's views on the outrages perpetrated by James Wyatt in the Chapel and elsewhere: for instance, for his work of destruction of the ancient roof of the Chapel, this architect found it necessary also to dig up almost the whole area of the floor to a great depth and thus to destroy the greater number of the sepulchral memorials with which the floor was then chiefly paved! Buckler no doubt thought that a College which could permit such wanton injury to its historic associations could be no fit trustee for his literary criticisms and drawings, and bequeathed much that is of the greatest interest to Oxford to the British Museum.

In their profound knowledge of the details as well as of the spirit of Gothic architecture, the Bucklers were in advance of their time: had their advice been followed, the College might have been spared the costly and unworthy additions of the Romantic period, such as the roofs and plaster ceilings of Wyatt, and we at the present day would be freer to devote our energy and treasure to much-needed additions to the College buildings, instead of undoing the work of inferior and unscrupulous architects and restoring the earlier and better style.

Having failed to obtain in Oxford any description of the fabric of the Hospital, when in 1900 I extracted from the wall of the Chapel Porch some fragments of stone molding[1] that had obviously once belonged to that Institution, it was gratifying to find that among the Buckler MSS., which had only recently been made available for study at the British Museum, there was an entire volume of MSS. entitled Rough Notes concerning the History of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, situated on the North side of the road without the East Gate of the University and City of Oxford. Superseded in the Fifteenth Century by the College of St. Mary Magdalen. By J. C. Buckler. Addit. MS. 27963. There were moreover several carefully executed drawings of details drawn to scale.

[1] Cf. Proc. Soc. Antiq. for Dec. 4, 1902.

Guided by Buckler's drawings I ascertained that practically the whole of the shell of an important building of the Hospital is still standing in the High Street, though its walls have been disguised by an outer veneer of new ashlar and by the insertion of new windows: to my astonishment when groping under the basement floor I found Early English corner pillars of a lower chamber of the Hospital still in situ: in 1912, when some chambers under the present Home Bursary were being refitted, the old masonry of the walls was stripped of plaster and was once more displayed to the eye for a few hours, but long enough to corroborate the entire accuracy of that part of Buckler's drawing and description. And now while these pages are actually in the printers' hands, two long lost architectural fragments which were sketched by Buckler at Magdalen and believed by him to have been a part of the fabric of the Hospital have been rediscovered at Hertford College, where they are said to have been disinterred in foundations only a few years ago. It is therefore with especial pleasure that I take this opportunity of recalling his long-forgotten labour of love for the College, by printing extracts (rearranged) from his rough notes and by reproducing his drawings. We must always remember that he saw far more of the vestiges of the old Hospital than any man now living will ever see, and was well qualified to judge of the meaning of what he saw. It is unfortunate that his sentences are sometimes involved and that his matter, having apparently been jotted down haphazard, suffers from want of arrangement.

We have now no list of the buildings of the Hospital nor plan of their grouping, though no doubt some clue might be obtained by consideration of other similar foundations of the same period. The Cartulary supplies evidence for the following:

1. A refectory for the brethren and sisters capable of holding about 18.
2. A dormitory for the brethren, to hold about 10.

3. A dormitory for the sisters to hold about 8.
4. A ward for the 'infirm', of whom there were probably never more than 8 or 10.
5. A chapel for the brethren.
6. A chapel for the infirm.
7. Some small rooms, probably 6 to 8, for those who bought corrodies at the Hospital, or were sent by the King to reside there for life; also for the Master.
8. A charnel house.
9. A chapter house.

All the evidence indicates that the area covered by the buildings of the Hospital was practically coextensive with the area of William of Waynflete's College. Buckler gives the measures of the College as 345 feet from east to west and 320 feet from north to south, that is from the North Wall across the Cloister, Chapel and Chaplains' Quadrangle to the south-west angle of the Great Tower. He further suggests that, for the sake of utilizing existing foundations or for grouping the new buildings conveniently with the old, certain dimensions and orientations of the Hospital buildings were perpetuated in the new College.

Mr. Wilson has traced the complicated procedure by which the Hospital buildings were transferred to the College. They would have remained standing in their entirety during the first decade or so of the life of the new College, when they were inhabited by the first President and Scholars, the others continuing to reside in premises where Waynflete had founded the first Magdalen Hall. When the erection of the new buildings of the College was taken in hand, it is hardly likely that more of the fabric of the Hospital was pulled down than was absolutely needful. We imagine that a central site was cleared first for the great buildings round the Quadrangle, while the Hospital buildings nearer the boundary were, so far as possible, left standing as offices and dwellings for the first President and Scholars and workmen, and as a screen or boundary wall. The first wholesale clearing of the site would probably have been begun in 1473, when stone was being collected, and by the 6th of May, 1474, matters were so far advanced that the Foundation stone of the College Chapel could be laid 'in the midst of the high altar'.

It follows that no trace of any original building of the Hospital in a central situation is to be found in situ, unless it be of the nature of a foundation or a well, or possibly a lavacrum in medio Claustri. Doubtless many of the old stones have been worked into the lower parts of the new walls. On the other hand the buildings near the outside remained standing until much nearer our own times than is commonly supposed; and if only careful records of the vestiges that have appeared from time to time during structural alterations had been kept, our information with regard to the Hospital fabric would by now have attained to respectable proportions. Builders working under architects rarely show respect for the work of earlier and better handicraftsmen than themselves.

Of the Hospital buildings which survived the completion of Waynflete's buildings, four main blocks may be recognized:

I. The Infirmary Block on the North Side of the College Cloister.
II. The Block North of the Infirmary, or the 'Stables' of 1674—c. 1733.
III. The Chapel Building in two storeys (c. 1234).
IV. The Kitchen Block, including the 'Divinity Reader's Lodgings'.

And to these we would add a mention of the Stone Cross opposite to the entrance to the Chapel of the Hospital, destroyed in 1562, the base level of which must now lie deep below the present surface of the ground.

Note on Orientation. In the following description we have, for the sake of brevity, used the points of the compass in their ecclesiastical sense as commonly accepted. It should however be borne in mind that the 'east-west' orientation of the old Chapel of the Hospital is really more nearly a north-south orientation, and that the buildings of the Hospital Infirmary and of the College are orientated almost due north-west and south-east. Thus the 'south' wall of the Hospital Chapel faces west-south-west. The exact orientation of the Hospital buildings may have considerable importance in the determination of their respective ages. We therefore commence our review with an account of those buildings which are more remote from the East Bridge Street (High Street) front, because they, being orientated irrespective of the line of the street, may possibly be older than the buildings erected upon the Jews' Garden given to the Hospital in 1231 and orientated by the line of the street.

In the sequel quotations from the Buckler MS. are indicated by references to the numbers of the folios; the present author's contributions are in square brackets.

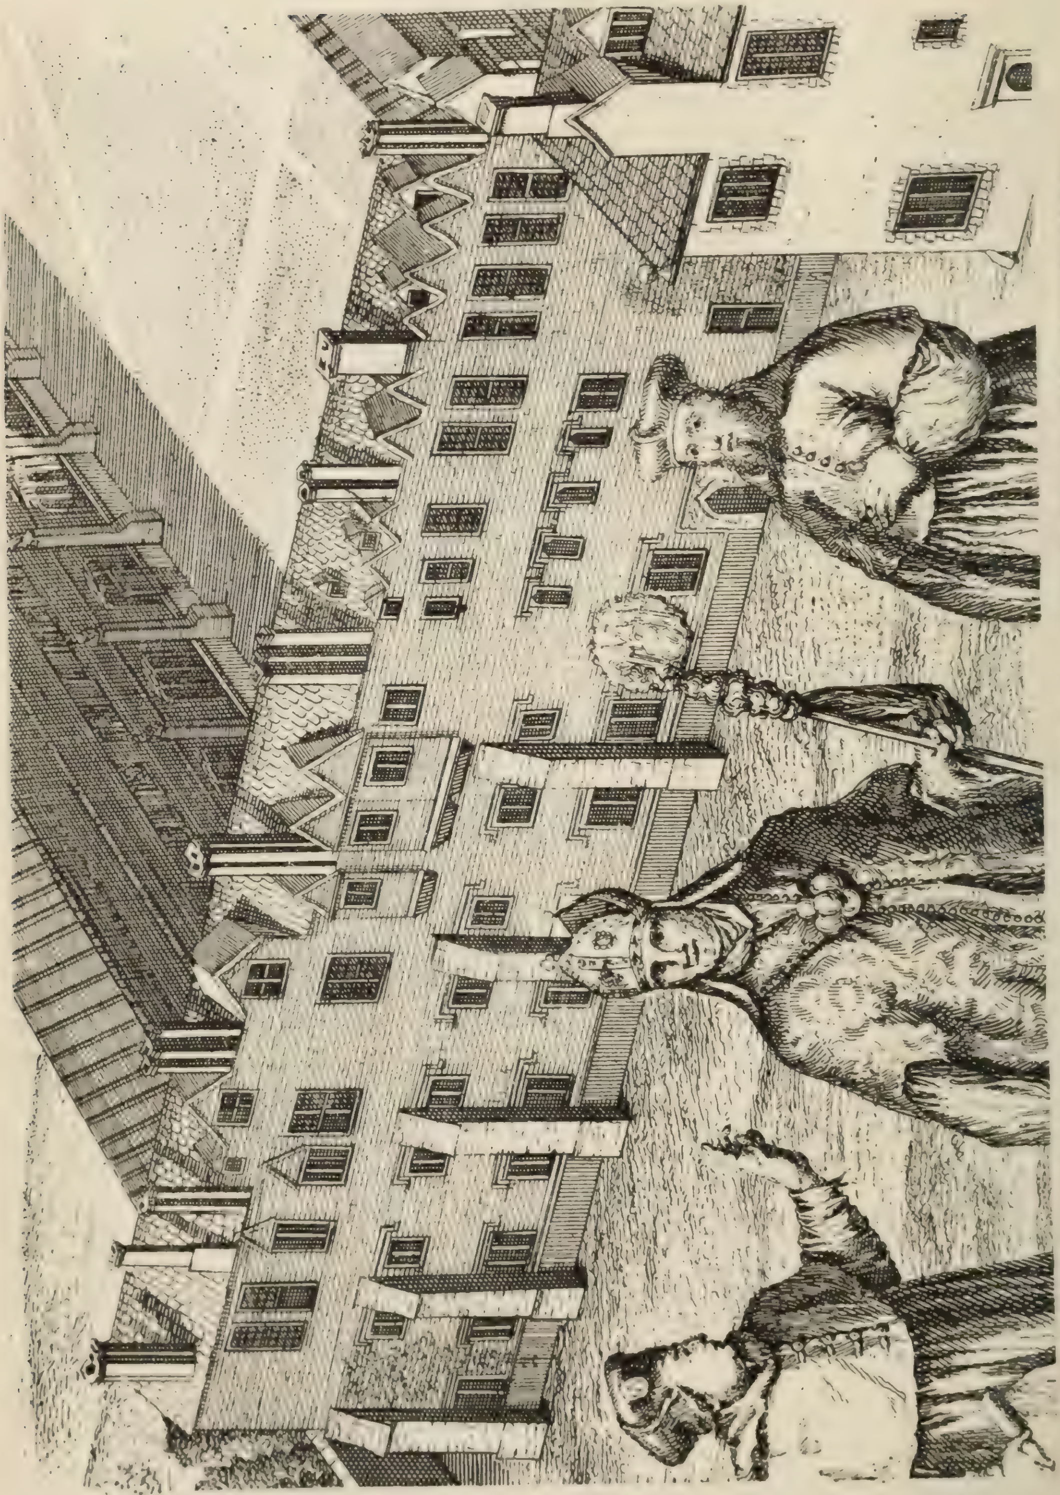

FIG. I. THE NORTH FRONT OF THE CLOISTER BUILDINGS IN WHICH WAS INCORPORATED THE NORTH WALL OF THE INFIRMARY BLOCK.

From the Oxford Almanack of 1730.

A. Buildings which are believed to have had the orientation of the southern boundary of land given to the Hospital by Hugo de Malaunay in 1194.

It is suggested that the orientation of these buildings was adopted by Waynflete as the orientation for the Great Quadrangle of Magdalen College.

I. THE INFIRMARY BLOCK

[Our authorities for the details of the old and frequently altered building on the north side of the College Cloister are Buckler, whose descriptions we reproduce, the Bird's-eye View of the College published in the Oxford Almanack of 1730, and certain drawings, now in the College Library, which were made previous to the final demolition of the building in 1822.

These drawings clearly show that the original building, previous to the superaddition of third and attic storeys. was two storeys high and was built, perhaps at different times, for two distinct purposes. For about one quarter of the length of the whole range at the western end, the wall-face was slightly out of line with the rest of the façade,[1] and the elevation is characterized by a row of single-light windows which, in spite of their Perpendicular surroundings, strongly suggest a row of Early English lancet windows. The eastern end was furnished with an elaborate system of isolated sanitary annexes which looked like and were afterwards converted into five large buttresses. It is on account of this unique system of sanitation on the north side of a building which on the other side must have had all the health-giving properties of a south aspect, that we have identified this block with the wards for the infirm of the Hospital. They would have been in two storeys, perhaps one for men and the other for women. The present unnecessary and ill-proportioned buttresses against the north front of the Cloister buildings are therefore a legacy from the old Hospital, with an interesting history. Five of them have been rebuilt by Joseph Parkinson upon the ancient ground-plan, but others have been added unnecessarily on either flank of his new oriel window of the College Library.

The row of single-light windows on the first floor appears to indicate a longish chamber in that position. By appropriate treatment the older part of this elevation might have been saved and the College might have boasted an architectural view that would have excelled in beauty and interest some of the older work in Merton College.]

[1] This is clearly shown in two water-colour drawings in Magdalen College Library.

f. 27 In point of magnitude the chief remnant of the Hospital spared by Waynflete was the range of building facing North, forming the boundary of the Cloister, the length measuring 194 feet 2 inches from E. to W.
f. 29 The Founder squared all his buildings with this ancient line, and extended and intersected them with mathematical accuracy.

The measure of 194 feet was adequate for the uniform breadth of the College from East to West up to the side of the Chapel and Hall, which together form the South or main limb of the pile; and is advanced Westward about 24 feet beyond the breadth figured.

As this part of the Hospital was distant from observation, the most northern of all the buildings, its aspect was suitable to its position and to its subordination in the interior economy. Its condition and treatment were the same when it became a member of the College. No need appeared to give embellishment to a part of the House beyond common observation. It still faced open ground, meadow or woodland to which there was no direct access except perhaps beyond the West boundary.

f. 30 The Founder preserved nothing more than the North wall of the
f. 31 outermost structure of the Hospital,—the side of a solid building in two stories; but every stone and stick were detached from it, its altitude no less than its length being suitable to his purpose. In breadth and interior disposition, new proportions and divisions were needful, the sturdy old wall lending its strength to the new appliances.

The bulk of the limb thus renewed, gave the measure for the rest. It was sufficient for the depth of the rooms which were in single lines, and in two stories.

In process of time this most meanly treated part of the whole edifice was brought into full view; but however serious, antique and picturesque the prospect it presented, the building gained no favour. No historical associations strengthened the plea for its preservation; and about the same time that Addison's portrait was set up in the Hall, his Chamber and Study at the summit of the North East angle of this range of building were swept away without compunction.

Almost all the windows had been inserted in the place of the original slender apertures. The ashlared wall, the massive buttresses, and the bulky protuberances which supplied recesses to the rooms, combined to produce a venerable monument of builder's work, to which had been added tall chimney-stacks with dormers of various shapes and sizes, pressed together on the parapet in groups as diversified as if they had been heaped up for pictorial effect.

From drawings by J. Buckler

The needless assault upon so interesting a portion of the College, f. 28 proved by its condition as to strength, and uncalled for by reason of its sundry mutilations which a willing mind and a well guided hand could easily have amended, was the resolve of the President,—the grateful recipient of the Founder's beneficence,—the exultant admirer of the accomplished Addison. He turned a deaf ear to pleadings in favour of a building not half worn out, and whose historical interest more than doubled its value as a relic rescued from the hurricane of mischief which swept all else away.

This part of the College, so remarkable for its antiquity and for the significance of its early and its recent history, has assumed an entirely new aspect, but without containing a particle of its former attraction. The demolition of the North wall [of the Cloisters], which was attended f. 103 with severe disasters, in revenge for the insolent robbery of antiquity, has added a few curious particulars to the stock of information bearing upon the economy of antiquity in domestic arrangements. This example is referred to at the foot of p. 61 [of Buckler's Observations on the original architecture of S. M. Magdalen College]: it relates to the Closets of necessity, and the drains connected therewith; and being of the age of the 13th century should be noticed as evidence of habits of decency very superior to those of later periods, and as showing the consideration with which these offices were contrived in the outer wall of a main building of the Hospital. They are in two f. 104 stories in every instance, but there is no appearance that fresh water was conveyed to them by means of machinery[1] [any more than in the case of the domicilium necessariorum annexed to New College. There Bishop Wykeham] went in a straightforward way to work, and seems to have had greater dependence upon manual labour than upon the refinements of science thus applied. The basement of his building is a pit full 80 feet long, and 16 feet wide, with walls 4 feet in thickness: the present depth from the floor to the soil being 14½ feet.

[1] The Science of Hydraulics was very well known and very frequently practised in that century. The writer has examined the underground leaden pipes which conveyed the water to Glastonbury Abbey, and those which the College gave him the opportunity of discovering among the ruins of the College at Brackley. The pipe 1½ in. in diameter took a slant direction from the North-east across the Sanctuary of the magnificent Church to the South-west among the College buildings.

This may not be regarded as a pertinent digression, since the subject which has occasioned its introduction possesses no trace of having been so thoughtfully and so scientifically provided with the means of securing the efficiency of the well contrived drains. As soon as this limb of the Hospital became the property of the College, the purpose of these provisions for health was changed. It became needful to purify the whole system; this being done the recesses were left open, or were enclosed as cupboards by the builder of the College. Plank stones, rough and strong, formed the covering of the drain, which was about 17 inches deep and nearly 2 feet 5 inches in advance of the wall: a branch drain of less capacity joined it from the interior of the College.

In modern days, when the eaves of the roof and grotesque sculptures have ceased to pour the rain water on the ground to disperse itself as it best could, this ancient drain was extended westward, and the whole line brought into use. This part of the discovery was made when the walls were uprooted, and the ground opened for the modern successors of the antique remains: it added to the writer's information upon a feature of the Hospital not before known for a certainty. Single closets[2] in different position are not uncommon in buildings of great age; but a range like this, short though it be, in connexion with the upper and lower floor, is not perhaps to be matched among the remains of the Domestic Architecture of any period previously to the Reformation.

II. THE BUILDING NORTH OF THE INFIRMARY

Being the Stables of 1674 to 1733

[A small group of low two-storeyed buildings formerly stood on the north side of the way leading to the bridge at the entrance to the Walks. It was believed by Wood that certain of these, too, formed part of the Hospital Buildings, though situated beyond the limits of the principal group of edifices.

The oldest view of a building upon this site is that of Agas, who in his oft-quoted map of 1578 represented the north side of a house with the same orientation as the Infirmary. It was a long two-storey building with a door and five two-light (?) windows to the ground floor rooms and five windows on the first floor,—a middle four-light window flanked by two three-light windows on either side.

[2] [The nearest approach to them with which we are acquainted are depicted in plan by Dollman in his account of the Hospital of St. Cross at Winchester. There however the closets of dwelling rooms are grouped side by side in pairs. The Infirmary of the Monastery of St. Gall (830–937 A.D.) was provided with excellent necessaria for the particular use of the inmates of the Dormitory and of the Ward for Purgations. Withington, Med. Hist., 1894.]

Such a house was obviously not a stable: we would suggest that here the Sisters of the Hospital may have resided, though of course in their day the windows may have been less wide than they were a whole century after the foundation of the College. The secluded and pleasant position of this dwelling by the Cherwell, with a garden behind, and perhaps over the bridge, the small enclosed paddock in which was growing the then young Great Oak of Magdalen, all shown in Agas's map, as well as its proximity to the Infirmary and the size of the house, all point to its having been a very likely abode for the Sisters. In elevation the building as it existed in 1578 was not unlike the Scholae Publicae of the University.

According to Loggan's View of the College (1674) some of the rooms of the 'Stables' were heated with fire-places. The buildings were probably removed about 1733 that they might not by their cottagy appearance detract from the grandeur of the New Buildings, then lately erected.]

III. THE CHAPEL AND CHARNEL HOUSE

Being respectively the Lecture Room and Almshouse of the 16th Century

[An important document respecting this building was drawn up in the form of a Report in 1596, and as it has already been printed in Vol. II, p. 463, we need do no more than quote one or two passages from it.

'2. All the edifices of the sayd Hospitall were in a manner defaced and utterly rased in the founder's time; one chappel only except, wherein we kepe divers lectures and exercises of learning, and under the sayd chappel a stonie vault very low under the ground and thereby unwholesome, which since in common report hath borne the name of the "allmes house" because (as we take it) that only remains of the ruin of the sayd Hospitall.'

As will appear in the sequel the style of architecture of the building accords so closely with that of others which are known to have been erected during the second quarter of the 13th century, that we have no hesitation in referring it to the period of the second foundation of the Hospital by Henry III in 1233. Having arrived at this conclusion on independent grounds, it was particularly gratifying to learn from Mr. Salter that the land upon which this part of the Hospital stands—i.e. the East Bridge Street front—was granted to the Hospital by that King. Several authorities state that the first stone was laid by the King himself.[1]]

f. 43 The figure or ground plan of the Chapel building, which contained a great chamber for secular uses, is a parallelogram whose measures in extreme length and breadth are 57½ ft. and 22 ft. 4 in. respectively. Within the walls on the ground floor, the measures are 50½ ft. by 15 ft. 4 in.; on the upper 51½ by 16 ft. 4 in. [See Plans on pp. 408 and 416.]

As just observed, the building is not simply a Chapel, as was commonly the case. In positions corresponding with the present, the
f. 44 Wayside Chapel was an isolated structure and therefore not necessarily fashioned by the rule of the ancient domestic architecture, in obedience to which the principal chambers were raised upon a basement.

VIEW OF MAGDALEN COLLEGE FROM EAST BRIDGE STREET, c. 1660

From Skelton, 'Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata', after a Picture in Magdalen College

The Hospital was most probably built on this plan, but if not, the little chapel conformed to the rule for some special advantage in the general arrangement, but of this no account can now be given.

Bridge Chapels received this distinction simply because of the depth of their basements below the level of the public footway. In the example of St. John, the elevation is composed of two stories above the level of the ground, the floor of the Chapel resting upon a chamber groined in stone, and elegantly finished in the details of its architecture. The altitude required for proper proportion in the interior of the Chapel was obtained by a steeply pitched roof of timber which spanned the room with the advantage of consistent ornament as well as of space. The walls have never presented any embellishment beyond that produced by the propriety of the design, and the careful finish of the mason-work.

Of the South or street front of the Chapel a general notion may be f. 50 formed from a large painting on canvas preserved in the President's Lodgings. No other authority is known to exist. In its absence no credit would be given to the statement that the Wayside Chapel retained its exterior design perfect in every member, as if its preservation were a religious obligation, and that harm would occur upon its destruction.

Certain it is that evil befel the College when James Wyatt entered f. 51 the precinct, laid the Chapel in ruins, disturbed the dead in their graves, destroyed their memorials, and turned out all that Bishop Waynflete thought most becoming to the Interior.

The painter of the picture was no flatterer of architecture. His fat representation of the Tower shows that the elegance of proportion offered no charms for his pencil. His partial and undefined view of the Chapel may be easily interpreted with the assistance of the detail of the extant remains. Each tier of windows is shown with distinctness: the sills of the lower are some distance above the footway. One tier is placed symmetrically over the other, the bays being denoted by buttresses, slender, shallow in projection [apparently so much so that the term pilaster-strips might almost be applied to them], and reaching to the parapet which is the plain finish of the elevation.

The Chapel windows [four in number, each with two lights, probably cusped, and with a quatrefoil[1]] were in two compartments, recessed like those of the East window of the ground Chamber, but less wide. The walls on the outside and in every aspect are of rubble, brought to a nearly smooth surface. In its compact surface were embedded the jambs and arches of the windows, of which sufficient remain to testify to the strength of the construction.

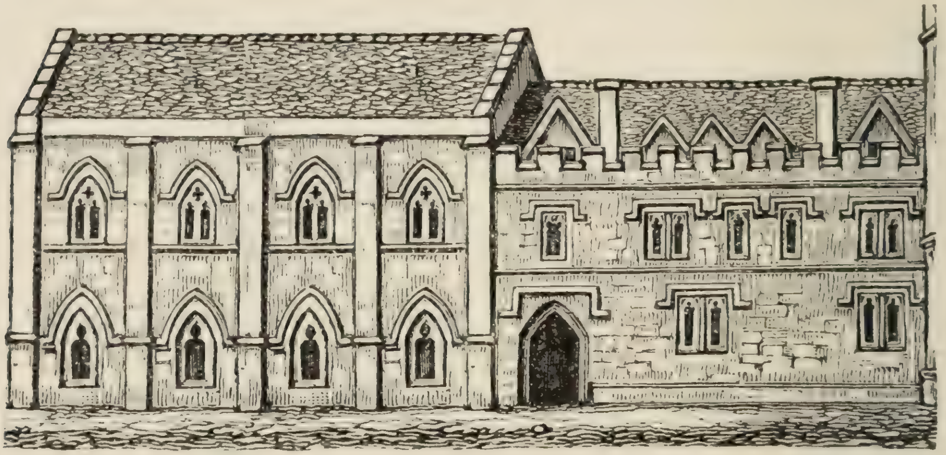
[1] [The windows were very like those of the Hospital of St. Thomas at Canterbury.]

[Elsewhere (Add. MS. 36,431, No. 744) Buckler has a note that the chancel of St. Michael's Church, Greenhill, Lichfield, is of 'early lancet work with this cornice under the sill and upon ye windows. Ye same in ye Chapel of S. John's Hospital on N. and S. sides.' This string course below the windows of the upper storey is indicated in the picture (Pl. II), and Buckler's section of it is given in fig. 10, 4 on page 429, but we do not think that B. could have seen it on the North side of the building.] In the absence of the Picture there would not be a particle of evidence to prove that the ashlar now on the outside is of so late a date as the 17th century, unless indeed the carvings in the parapet would be accepted as satisfactory upon this point.



The Chapel Building of 1234. Building of 1509. Great Tower 1506.

FIG. 3. THE CHAPEL OF ST. JOHN'S HOSPITAL FROM THE STREET.

This view has been reconstructed by the addition of two bays to the end of the woodcut in Ingram's 'Memorials of Oxford'. The original wood block was kindly lent for this purpose by Mr. J. Parker. The ends of the ridge of the roof were probably ornamented with terminal crosses.

When this view of the College was depicted, the building between the Chapel and the Tower, also the length between the Tower and the extreme eastern angle, had been completed.

f. 59 The North side of the Chapel was left rudely plain, considering that the building was insulated. It was almost a blank surface, and was made more mean by the substitution of eaves for a parapet, and a coat of plaster for honest concrete, or rough mason-work. This side is now completely shrouded by the Ante-chapel of the College, for by a singular coincidence their walls are within a very few feet of each other, and exactly opposite. . . .

To the foregoing general description of the Chapel conjecture can f. 51 add nothing that will increase its interest. Some of the greater deformities remain to be enumerated. It will then be evident how hopeless the undertaking to adapt a building designed for a special service to employments foreign to its entire organization and to the strictness of its architecture.

The large vaulted Chamber on the ground floor, being the Charnel of the Hospital, afterwards converted into the Almshouse of the College, and later adapted for use as Cellars, Staircase, Lavatory and Servants' Rooms.

[This Chamber is more completely preserved than any of the other buildings of the Hospital. We must therefore make allowance for the tendency of the architect who laid bare its columns and vaults, to attribute to the room a greater importance than it perhaps deserves. We give his descriptions in extenso, but later evidence convinces us that what he calls the 'Strangers' Hall' was not used by 'the classes who solicited temporary repose and refreshment', but by those whose bones required a more lasting resting-place.]

The vaulted basement of the Chapel building was of primary impor- f. 46 tance in the disposition of the daily charities at the gate. It is indeed the representative of the large chamber or hall to which another position would have been given at a later period. This was the Strangers' Hall, belonging to those classes who solicited temporary repose and refreshment by night and by day; whose numbers were uncertain, whose necessities were various; sometimes their call was simple and brief, and sometimes urgent and prolonged.

This was an active, incessant, and very important part of the duty of this hospital, but auxiliary to the larger obligations of its endowment as a home for the sick and the aged, and their becoming maintenance. The shrine of St. Frideswide in the Priory church was an object of great attraction; and the gatherings of curious and the devout resembled a perpetual stream, not always equally abundant but at no time exhausted. It had its own eleemosynary; but there were at seasons vast herds who would stop short of the city gate, and prepare themselves for the duty of the morrow. Besides these there were mere wayfarers.

[The only entrance was at the West end by a doorway which is shown by its hood-mold to have been originally on the outside of the building. The inner face of the wall is supported by a rear-arch of flattish curvature, to allow headroom for the pointed-topped door to open. The level of the floor inside seems to have been some two feet below the surface of the ground outside, for there were three steps down. The architectural proportions of the doorway are well shown in Plates III and IV.]

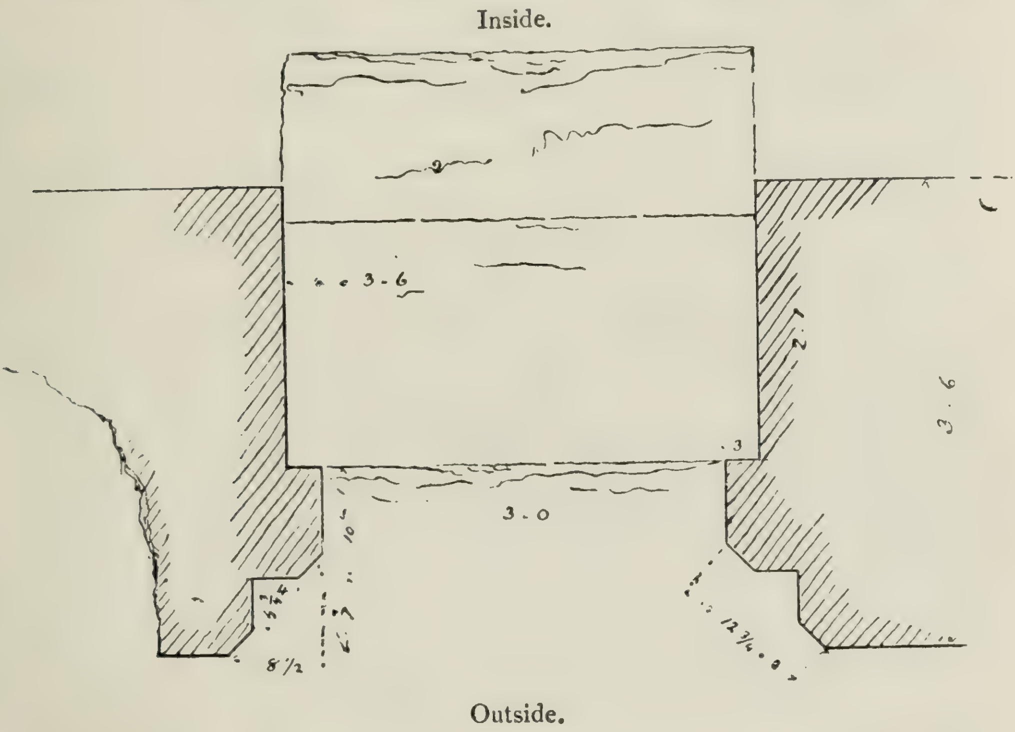

FIG. 5. PLAN OF ENTRANCE TO THE CHARNEL.

The Chamber is arched overhead, and groined in stone, or rather f. 47 was before any part of the interior was devoted to the service of the College, for a vain attempt was made by expelling its elaborate stonework to introduce the same moderate share of convenience as in the adjoining chambers, but this basement part of the College with a South aspect defied the endeavour, and submitted to its present degradation beyond the reach of memory.

The arch [= vault] spanned the interior of the basement from one side wall to the others. It consisted of a mass of powerfully compacted rubble stone and concrete about fifteen inches in thickness. All the required strength in this arch was of rough workmanship connected with the walls, which were formed of precisely the same mixture. The wall arches were embedded in this coarse material, and held fast by it, as their remnants are at this day. The building as it was taken possession of in the 15th century would, under fair usage, have proved indestructible.

The groin-work was disposed in four bays with diagonal ribs intersected in the centre of the roof, the clustered springers rising from pillars attached to the walls, and to the four angles of the Chamber. The height of the interior from the floor to the vault was 13 feet 9 inches; nearly two-thirds of this measure being occupied by the arch of the roof, which has a solid bearing upon the walls; and with the same precaution the groins extended with elegant uniformity over its surface.

A lancet window appeared in each bay in front, but the back or North wall was blank.

The East window consists of two compartments [= lights] within an arch of singular form, recessed. [The hood-molding, which is carried on across the entire end of the building as a string, is a scroll-molding with a fillet (Plate III). The cusps, of which Buckler found indications in the lights, are soffit-cusps of the kind common in the second quarter of the 13th century.]

The door is at the West end but not in the centre.

The light to the interior was not abundant: it descended from apertures so much above the floor as to prevent inquisitive observations both from within and without. These apertures were perfectly plain on the inside, sloped through the wall from 24 inches to perhaps less than 12 on the outside.

The walls on the inside were ashlared with small stones in courses, even and smooth formerly, but now broken, disjointed, and so much disturbed by the alterations which have been made at different times, as to present a rude appearance. In contrast with this, the large angle-stones of the windows are observable, and remarkable since in the refined architecture of the period great attention was commonly paid to the plain mason-work so as to keep it in agreement with the narrow courses of the design. While time and mischief have roughened the walls, these unsparing powers have operated with a different effect upon the features of the architecture: these may be mischievously mutilated, but as long as any part of the workmanship remains in its original state, merit cannot be disguised.

The bases and capitals of the pillars were wrought with elegance, and the arches and ribs of the roof with care, and in the solid simplicity characteristic of the period.

[The corner columns are of a somewhat unusual type in Early English architecture. The nearest approach to them with which we are acquainted are in the Choir of the Temple Church in London (dated c. 1240). The capitals are similar, and in both the bases are worked with a triple roll (Pl. VII).

Notice has been taken of the attempts which were made at different f. 56 periods to raise the floor in the basement of the Chapel proportionate to the increase of the ground on the outside. The accumulation of the earth in towns, singularly conspicuous in the Street front of Magdalen College, is an evil of very ancient date, and one against which no check has at any time proved effectual. The [street] pavement is now [1858] 7 feet 2 inches above the original floor of the Chamber.

The lower chamber has acquired the appellation of a crypt, a term f. 52 as improperly given in this instance as in many which might be named. True it is that the earth had been allowed to accumulate round the walls, and thus to bury them to a considerable depth; but effectually as this clandestine process had deprived the chamber of its former freedom and wholesomeness, the term is not strictly applicable, nor brought so near as to the verge of accuracy, even when the roadway which descended from Carfax to the river without the East Gate was made level to a considerable distance within the fortified boundary.

The floors of Churches cover Crypts, but the term is not faithfully borne out in many instances, since these vaulted basements were not generally built within the ground.

St. John's Hospital occupied a site so slightly out of level that it would have been in danger of floods at certain seasons if its buildings had been based upon Crypts.

It is proved by the entrance to the ground chamber that its floor was sunk within the soil about two feet. This level had not been disturbed when the property fell into the hands of Bishop Waynflete. This appears in the altered level of the floor, the first attempt made to improve the interior, early in the reign of Henry VIII.

As carried out it was a strong indictment against the fine old chamber, —a sweeping measure designed to obliterate its architectural character, and to convert it into lodging rooms in accordance with the rest. The stone roof [i.e. vaulting] was swept away, and with it whatever f. 53 stood in advance of the walls; but as the pillars in the four corners offered no impediments to the proposed alterations, they escaped with a few accidental mutilations, those at the West end remaining most perfect, indeed so perfect that their shape was very little deformed. The tall, projecting springers of the groins were also in their places.

[At this point Buckler doubtless intended to draw special attention to the two Tudor fire-places which were inserted in the South wall at a height of about 2 feet above the old floor line. They are eloquent testimony that the chamber had become unwholesomely damp, perhaps even flooded when the Cherwell rose high, and to improve matters the floor was raised and some two or three separate chambers were contrived, one of which being vacant 'about the beginninge of the raygne of King Henry VIII' was furnished at the cost of President Claymond with four beds. So that throughout the sixteenth century the young College in a small way, and aided by an endowment from Claymond for the maintenance of his beds, still kept up the charitable work of the old Hospital. But we imagine that even with the new fire-places the almshouse could not have made a very cheerful abode, and it is on record that in 1507 there were four burials from the domus pauperum, and several more in 1508–9.

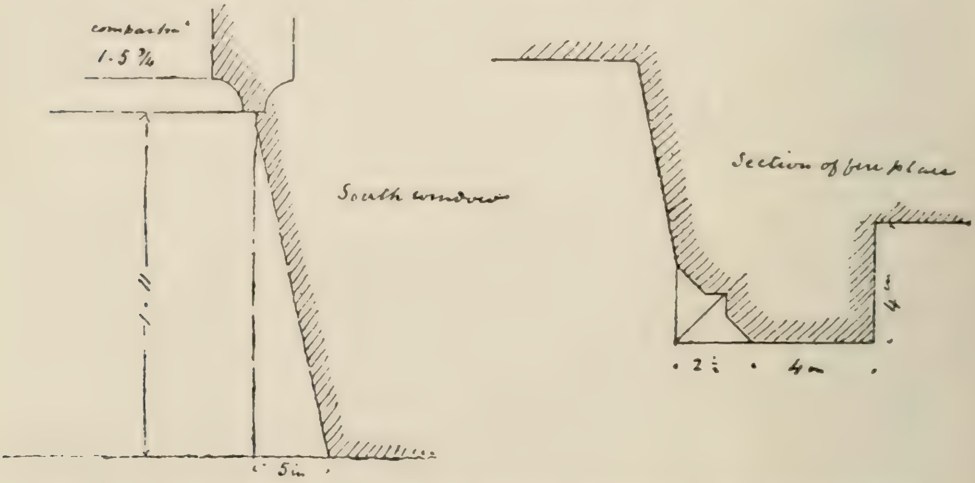

FIG. 6. SECTIONS OF JAMBS OF SOUTH WINDOW AND FIRE-PLACE.

In 1596 it was reported that 'the usage to intertayne the pore in the said allmeshouse hath bynn from time to time in this sorte. In 1631–43 Magister Ellis received a salary of £3 as Keeper of the Almonry.]

It is clear therefore that no injury of moment was left for the avidity f. 53 of a later period. The lancet windows were spared, and the interior, thus refashioned, was subdivided, modernised, and perhaps for a short time, inhabited.

All these arrangements, destructive or seasonable, were afterwards undone, but to what end cannot be guessed, seeing that improvement had been driven farther back than before: the fire-places,—needful appendages here—were rendered useless, and neither light nor air refreshed the interior.

The earliest and most fatal alterations included a raised floor 26 inches above the original pavement, and within a few inches of the ground line on the outside.

Under the second assault in the 17th century, the floor was again raised other 24 inches, but not uniformly. It was now placed 7 feet below the glass line of the windows, which were inserted at this time, and have not since been altered.

At the present day [1858] the street pavement is 4 feet 8 inches below the same glass line. But as amendment has not hitherto followed alteration, these changes are not worthy of further notice. Others may, in time to come, sweep all these things out of existence.

[In a further note dated 1866, Buckler draws attention to a cross wall built across the charnel and 2 ft. 4 in. within its west wall. This appears to be the foundation of a fire-place and chimney-stack constructed almost abreast of the pulpit and near the middle of the building.]

f. 54 If the scheme to gut the South buildings in its whole length had been carried out as proposed by the President [Routh], the unwholesome deposits under the ground floor would have been removed, and a rearrangement made of greater value than the present.

Except the Lodge there is not a single habitable room on the ground floor, and it is perhaps owing to this circumstance, and their consignment to neglect and rubbish, that the charnel house beneath has not been detected, and abolished.

f. 55 Some of the wooden partitions and obstructive bulks within the groined chamber were removed, and as much of the unoccupied space as could be dealt with was excavated to the ancient level. But an obstruction of no ordinary kind checked the employment; it was discovered for the first time within human memory, that a great mass of human bones had been deposited against the East wall of the groined chamber, not thrown in promiscuously as if in haste to hide the mortal remains: the act was performed considerately, the bones being sorted and closely packed.

There was no dealing with such objects under the circumstances: the discovery was affecting, and the bones were speedily concealed from view.

Human bones, piled together in the same way, were also found under the floor of the Eastern room of the Lodge. The intermediate space of the building may be occupied in the same manner, the whole length having been excavated for one huge grave as a receptacle for human bones of which no account can be given.[1]

The Chapel building was an excellent specimen of the different kinds of mason-work which its construction included. The builders had not to contend with a dearth of material; on the contrary, stone was used profusely wherever it was required in plain and unmeasured blocks. It was of a quality so durable as not to have been defaced by the weather. But notwithstanding the bounty of its owners, the outer surface of the walls was not ashlared: a concrete composition was preferred, and time has not perceptibly diminished its strength, which was powerfully tested when the front of the wall was torn away as the measure previous to its transformation in unison with the rest of the College front.

[1] For a note on a previous reinterment of bones during Dr. Jenner's presidency, cf. Chandler, Life of Waynflete, p. 90.

The exterior was as strongly marked by the solidity of its appearance and the simplicity of its features as the interior by the elegance of the general design and the delicacy of its detail. Such however was the merit of this early style of Pointed architecture (commenced in the preceding reign), owing to the unvarying application of the leading characteristical forms, that the impression upon the mind was certain and stedfast. Cistercian architecture abounds in examples which fortify this remark.

The intrusive windows were very carelessly constructed as to levels and slopes, a remark which applies to the inside only: for them the arches of the lancet windows were destroyed, and for greater convenience the remainders of the apertures were walled up, but they will always be distinctly seen; and it is curious to observe that the second from the altar end is 3 feet wide, the rest being 2 feet.

It is perhaps still more curious to notice that the narrow course f. 57 of ashlar upon which the solid sills of the inserted windows rest denotes the position of the first range of putlogs of the builders' scaffolding. These short lengths of timber upon which the footboards were laid, were of oak, 5 inches by 4½ inches, exactly shaped, placed from 10 to 15 feet apart, and inserted 18 or 20 inches into the wall. When their work was done, the putlogs were not withdrawn, but were cut off to within 3 inches of the face of the ashlar. The fragments thus spared, and now brought to view for the first time since the final alteration of the Wayside Chapel, are more or less decayed. In several instances the putlogs had been wholly removed and the holes filled up with mortar.

The Chapel.

The Chapel was indeed a very conspicuous object on the side of f. 25 the highway when it stood alone, but in process of time it was pressed upon by domestic architecture; the free air could no longer circulate around it, and the only wonder is that the force and fraud of innovation —the uncompromising foe to order and conservative feeling,—left it so long in the enjoyment of its genuine character.

Of the Chapel very little derived from the building can be said. f. 50 Whatever traces of the design may have been spared on the inside are too closely covered up to be examined.

Before proceeding farther . . . it may be well to enquire by what f. 58 means and in what position it [the Chapel] was formerly approached,

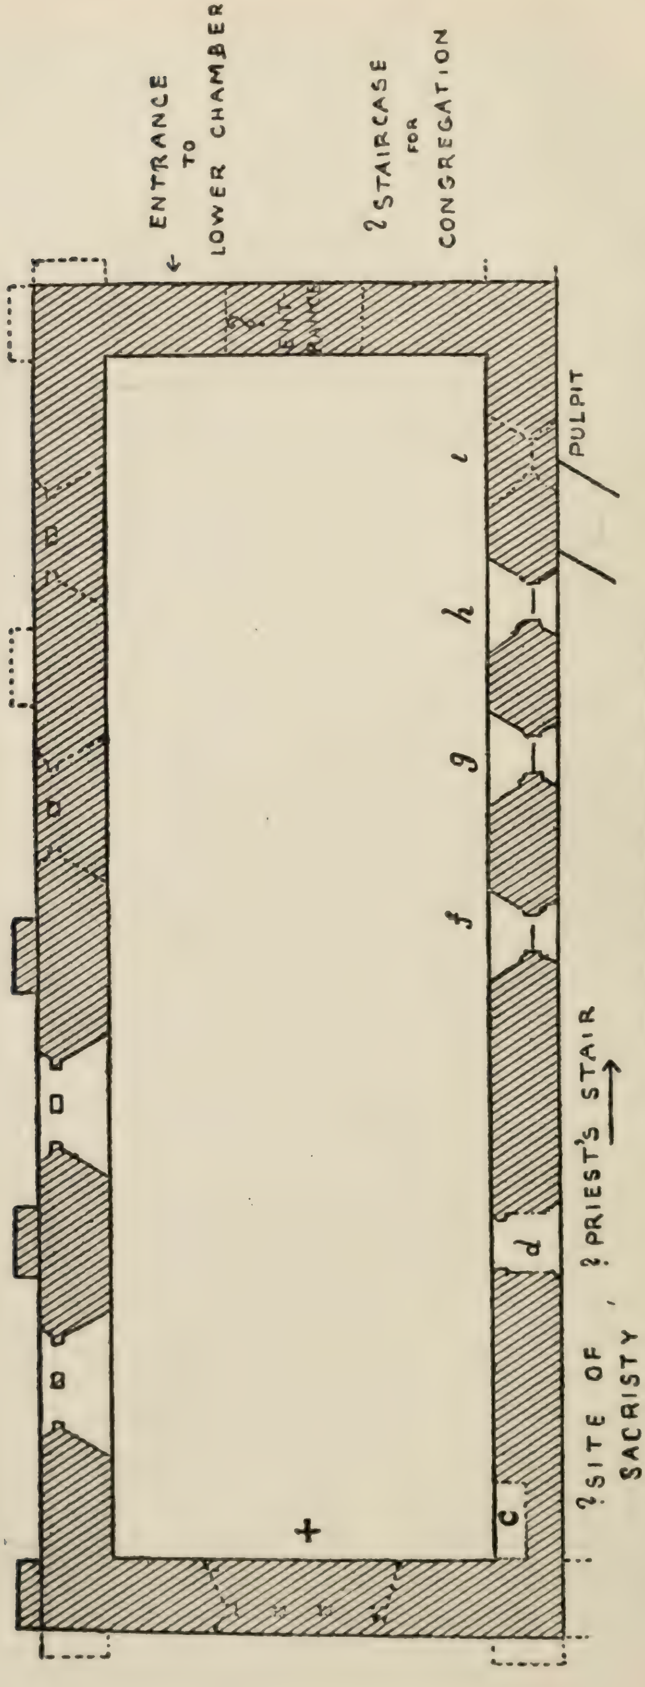

FIG. 7. PLAN OF THE CHAPEL.

Suggested restorations are indicated by dotted lines.

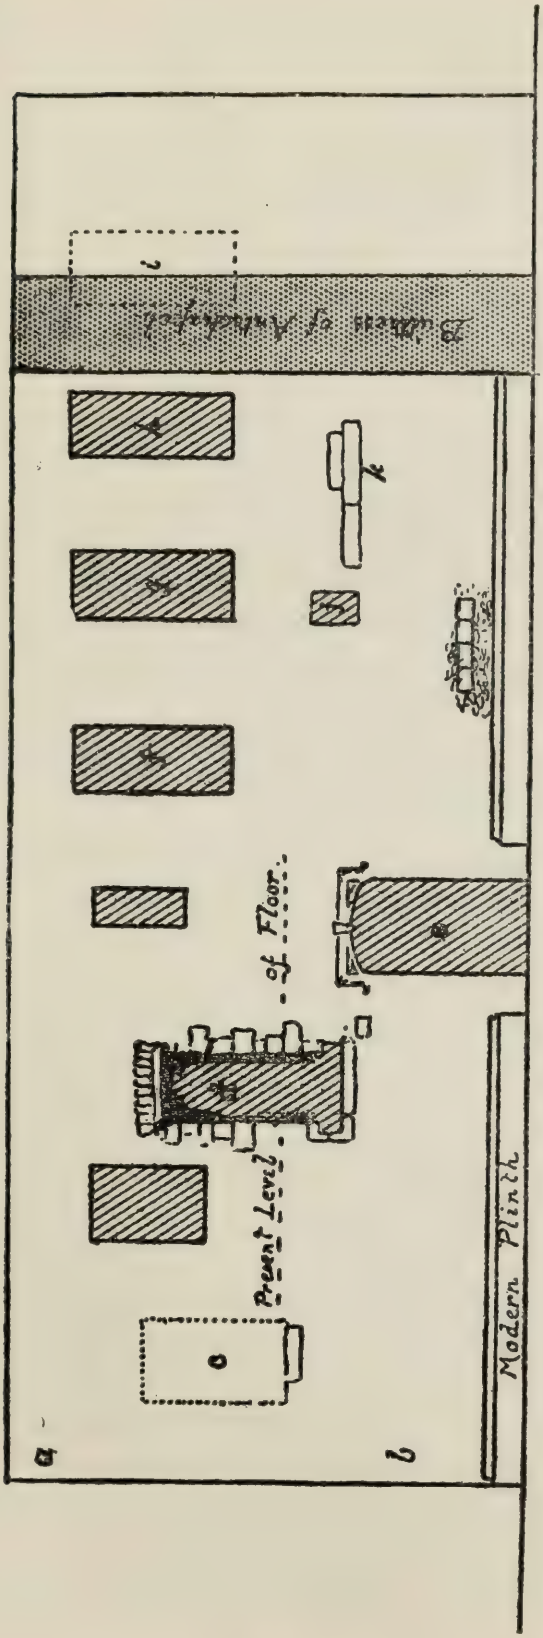

FIG. 8. ELEVATION OF NORTH WALL OF THE CHAPEL BUILDING.

remembering that its destination required that admittance should be obvious, and as direct as could be, its floor being elevated between 13 and 14 feet from the ground. The fair suggestion is that the Chapel, having always been an insulated building, had a Porch, or covered Lobby containing a stair, attached to the West end. This seems more probable than that there should have been an exposed Stone Stair, however common the custom for nearly two centuries
f. 59 after the Anglo-Norman practice had been established. That an appendage of the kind described continued in use up to a late period is scarcely to be doubted on recollection of the very considerable and injurious alteration which was made for the first time in the 17th century for the sole purpose of ascending to the Chapel.

[That the north wall of the Chapel building was continued westwards, and might therefore have served to support a staircase, is apparent from Buckler's observation on p. 419, lines 2 to 7.]

f. 59 At this time a characteristical, but very grotesque door was forced in this back wall of the basement, within which, and at the same time (the groined roof having been previously destroyed), a staircase[1] wholly of timber was framed with great solidity, and it remains to this day unaltered, and gives access to the rooms with which the whole interior of the Chapel is deformed.

. . . But as to the original means of ascent to the Chapel, nothing more can be said than that the ground it occupied was absorbed by the new chambers. The President's judicious scheme, mentioned in another place, would have laid open the Chapel, and no doubt brought to light, from side to side, and from end to end, many intelligible traces of the design. As things remain, a recess in the side wall is the only original feature, belonging to the interior, known to the writer: it was brought to light many years since, during the general survey, but un-
f. 60 accompanied by any other curious discovery. It did not stand within the Clerks' Court, but its east wall being on a line with the same side of the ante-Chapel, a definite inner boundary was given to the Court; and it has often occurred to the writer that the cherished intention of the Founder was to preserve the Chapel, whatever might be its value in the economy of the College.

This notion seems to be strongly corroborated by the care with which the Founder caused the angle of the College Chapel to be connected with the North-west angle of the little Chapel. The union was happily suggested by the necessity for the Pulpit, which is an attractive feature in a position as favourable for ornament as for its peculiar use. It is important to remark that the flank wall of St. John's Court is attached to the Pulpit, and that this wall to the jamb of the first door, a length of seven feet, is as substantial as the wall of the Chapel, and is indeed a prolongation of it westward thus far; the other jamb of the same door being in a wall 2 feet 8 inches thick, this being the measure of the walls of this flank of the court. The prolonged wall seems to imply an extension of the original buildings along the South boundary, or at least some kind of appendage to the Chapel, but no opportunity was given for discoveries under ground. These remarks have occurred (to the writer) since the revealment of a fragment of the West wall of the Chapel within the wall shown in the ground plan. How it came to pass that this wall was so well defined, as having on one face the pillars and groins in the angles, and on the other the entrance to the groined chamber with a most marked excavation in the wall to give freedom to the door from the court, if it were not in existence at the time, and all these particulars exposed to the light of day, is inexplicable.

[1] [The stair leading up to the present Home Bursary.]

When the blank character of the North side of the Chapel was spoken of, the several plain windows which once opened to the Chapel were not overlooked. One was walled up solidly at the time the Pulpit was erected; but the others were retained for the use of the timber Staircase, and give distinctness to objects and incidents prominent in the downward history of the building, while they shed light faintly upon others which in prosperous days were honoured and protected. Formerly, when the Chapel was subdivided by a screen, the three narrow and unadorned windows referred to opened upon the public area before the Sanctuary.[1]

The solution of the various difficulties of this limb of the College might long since have been accomplished but for the selfishness of an individual not upon the foundation, nor in any way connected with elegant taste, yet he baffled the praiseworthy design of the President to economise space, and increase the accommodation of the College. f. 61
Late in life, too late for success to the extent desired, the good President wished to combat with this difficulty, and there can be no doubt that he brought uncommon judgement to bear upon the subject, but he was miserably thwarted, and the plan as a whole was set aside.

[1] [Here Buckler may be mistaken. It is just possible that this north wall, of which he was writing, was originally an inside wall, and that the 'unadorned windows' were inserted after the transference of the Hospital buildings to Magdalen College.]

[Before quoting further from the Buckler MS., it will perhaps make the position clearer if we draw attention to some recent discoveries and give in outline a sketch of the Chapel as we now see it. Since Buckler examined the building the exterior coat of plaster has been removed from the outer north wall and the masonry has been patched and repointed, so that it is now possible to see structural details which were previously concealed.

Above a modern plinth, 17 inches high, the greater part of the wall is faced with small rubble stones, among which window-jamb stones and a few other large stones are conspicuous (fig. 8). There are larger stones (a . . . b) all up the eastern end of the wall: here the masonry gives me the impression that a cross wall or buttress has been removed, rather than that this corner is as the builders left it. Excavation might show how far foundations extend. Next, at 9 feet above the present ground-level is a horizontal stone, which appears to be structurally related to the bottom of a large recess, c, within the chapel, abreast and north of the altar. This may be a walled-up north doorway leading to a vestry, or it may have been a cupboard. Then, beyond a rectangular modern window with thick wooden sashes of the Wren period, is a walled-up doorway d (unknown to Buckler) which formerly opened into the Chapel through Buckler's 'Recess' under a shouldered arch (Plate IX, fig. 1). This doorway is a fact of fundamental importance, because it is absolute proof that the Chapel building originally extended further north than it now does, and that some portion at any rate of its north wall was an inside wall at a time before the College Ante-chapel was erected. It is to be regarded as the priest's entrance to the Chancel, and indicates the former existence of an external, and probably covered, staircase. From the appearance of the masonry I would suggest a landing immediately outside the doorway, and a flight of steps descending westward along the wall. Having regard to the main entrance to the Hospital being west, it would be a natural direction for the approach.

Near the pulpit wall there is again a course of original large masonry, k, nearly on a level with the Chapel floor, but the structural significance is not at present clear.

The interior of the Chapel was well lit. Over the altar (where there is now a sitting-room fire-place) there would have been an east window, perhaps with three lights and probably with plate tracery, while we have pictorial evidence that the south wall was pierced with two two-light windows with quatrefoils in the eastern half of its length. West of these there may either have been two other similar windows, making four in all, or else a row of four plain, narrow single-light windows ranged symmetrically with those in the north wall: these would have given light to the nave. The three windows f, g, h in their present state with shallow moldings (Pl. IX, fig. 3) on their simple splays do not give one the impression of being contemporaneous with the building, but the exact period of their introduction is quite uncertain. We agree with Buckler in thinking that the entrance for the congregation must have been from the west, and we would urge in this connexion that the lop-sided arrangement of the basement doorway may have been in relation to a staircase which was against the north end of the west wall.

The pulling down of the northern building containing the Priest's stair and the walling-up of the north door of the Chapel may certainly be regarded as a necessary consequence of the adoption by Waynflete of the plan for Transepts to the College Chapel, and of the execution of the idea of building the College on as large a scale as could possibly be worked in between the north wall of the Infirmary, the Kitchen, and the pulpit corner of the Chapel of St. John's Hospital.

In 1490–1, and therefore some years after the completion of the College Chapel, we find it on record that the Chapel of St. John was repaired and that it was furnished with a clock. (Macray, i, p. 22.)

The degradation of the Chapel probably began in the year before the Great Fire of London, for in 1666 an account was settled with one Badger, caementario operanti in vet. Capella, 34 li. 5*s.* 8*d.*, for making six new chambers within it. (Macray, iv, p. 22.)

The old front was altered at about the same time and was thus forced into line with the 1507–9 building between the Chapel and the Great Tower. Concerning this alteration Buckler was, as usual, outspoken.]

A fire-place excavated on each side of the East wall has taken the place of the Altar window; and a cluster of chimneys has rudely supplanted the monitory cross which once appeared on the gable. f. 50

The timber roof rose so much above the altitude required by the newer buildings that it could not be pardoned. Mischievous pains were taken to humble the Chapel to the scale and aspect of the rest of the elevation: but whether to this end the original roof was wholly removed, or only in part dilapidated to make it accord with its adjunct, remains uncertain, no portion of it having been opened to view.

But it has never associated cordially with the newer chambers. In f. 25 the forced connexion there could be no agreement, nor any chance of the union ever being satisfactory. The ancient basement was a fine example of the method of treating that part of the Domestic Edifice generally. It contained the best Architecture, but nothing besides for comfortable occupation; it was at all times fireless, of stone throughout, and not over-windowed.

f. 26 When the alteration was made, the passage from the Street to the Clerks' Court [Chaplains' Quadrangle] was made. The archways are of this debased period. But for what purpose is uncertain. They were too late to be of service to the almspeople: the President [Routh] scoffed at the appellation of the 'Pilgrim's Gate'; and he would not entertain the notion that it had ever been used as an entrance to the College. For what purpose then was it made? The question may be answered by supposing that almsgiving survived the destruction of the latest relics of the hospital dwellings, and that this street entrance was the way for the recipients of the last grains of the ancient charity. This seems to be the correct state of the case. The final extinction of this ancient house of charity occurred in the 17th century when this entrance was formed. The little that remained of the royal bounty grew less, and at length passed silently into oblivion. The charity was doubtless maintained while any of the inmates of the old foundation survived its suppression.

[This gate is shown in the aforementioned oil painting (Plate II), and therefore must have been in existence about 1665, before the lowering of the ridge of the Chapel roof. The old oaken door with a peep-hole, that was made to fit the entrance at that time, is now (1917) preserved in the Home Bursary.]

Foundations between the Chapel and the Great Gate.

In an enlargement of the Lodge during the progress of the works undertaken in the front since their commencement anno 1850, the basement of a cross wall of formidable bulk and solidity was discovered under the floor, and removed. It resembled a mass of living rock, and for a long time resisted the powerful forces which at length reduced it to fragments. f. 32

The writer owns that he felt no regret for the almost hopeless labour of the workmen under his employ, but had much praise to bestow upon the brave fellows of antiquity who placed so much trouble in the way of injurious men and performed such good work in the noble cause of charity.

It was observed that the ancient underground fragments pointed in one direction, that is, perpendicular to the front wall standing on the margin of the footway, but there is nothing more in them for remark. Relics such as these, and others which admitted of different treatment, after being hidden for many generations, appear, as if to give testimony which as far as it reaches is useful, and is instructive as regards the quality of the structure of the 13th century.

[I have failed to find any plan among the Buckler MSS. by which the exact site of this cross wall can be identified. But it would either have belonged to a building joined on to the west end of the Chapel Building or it may have been continuous with the foundations of the Great Gate of the Hospital, which certainly faced west towards the City and was almost certainly provided with a Lodge for a Porter.

It should be remembered that in early days gate-relief may have been given to the poor at this gate instead of at the so-called Pilgrim's Gate, which appears to have been merely a side-door in a wall at the east end of the Chapel until 1506–8 and was in no sense a porta magna. There is a record that in 1481 the College Barber (who in after days at any rate was also the College Porter and may have been a pluralist then) had charge of the gate-relief of the poor. The porta magna of the Hospital was probably still used as the main entrance in the early days of the College. Its survival would explain why Waynflete does not appear to have thought it necessary to construct a new Gateway for his College.

The exact position of the entrance to the Chapel is a matter of some importance for the determination of the true position of an interesting feature of early Oxford topography, which, I believe, has been misplaced in modern maps,—the large stone Cross, greatly venerated by travellers. 'Nor did any persons whatsoever go over East Bridge, but what paid their respects to the famous Cross of St. John's Hospital.'[1]

In the City Records for 1331[2] there is a strong suggestion that the Masters, brethren and men of St. John's Hospital had been 'distressed or disquieted by the City authorities . . . for the making and repair of the way which reaches from Little Bridge, even to the Cross near the gate of the Hospital'. Now if the Hospitallers were held responsible for such repairs in their capacity as owners of a street frontage, it would only appear reasonable that they should be expected to repair the roadway for the entire length of their frontage.

[1] Hearne's Note to Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, quoted in Holland's Cruciana, p. 271. Bloxam, ii, p. lxix.

[2] MS. Twine xxiii, p. 455, quoted by Hurst, Oxford Topography.

The commonly accepted position of the Cross does not mark the full extent of the Hospital frontage by several yards. The site of the Cross as indicated in the Town plan published by the Ordnance Survey Office and repeated in the map to Mr. Wilson's History, is marked in the middle of the very narrow East Bridge Street on a level with the middle of the Chapel.

Bloxam was, I think, in error in locating the cross 'before the Pilgrims' gate' (Register, ii, p. lxix). The objections to a cross upon any such position are that the roadway was very narrow, that there is no indication of a widening or recess in which a large cross could have stood, that it does not mark the limit of the roadway for which the Hospitallers might reasonably have been held responsible, and that in 1562 the College, by ordering its destruction, must have been in possession of its site.

We find a better explanation of its position in two entries in the College accounts, relating to its demolition (Bloxam, ii, p. 277).

'1562 Solut. 20 Martii Gul. Robinson et Johanni Wilks crucem ante januas sacelli Divi Johannis diruentibus et lapides ibidem effodientibus viii s.

— Solut. 25 Martii Jackson et Matthewe locum in quo crux stetit pavimento tegentibus iii s. iiii d.'

The money spent on demolition is a measure of the substantial nature of the fabric. If the januae sacelli Divi Johannis were at the west end of the Chapel Building, the cross ante januas would naturally have stood still further west and within the line of the street frontage. I would suggest that it stood in the College grounds in the angle between the line of the street frontage and the boundary line between the College and Magdalen Hall, or in other words in the angle between the lines of the present South-facing entrance and of the older West-facing entrance to the College. The Cemetery of the Brethren undoubtedly covered much of this space: the Cross, as Mr. Salter has suggested, may have stood in the Cemetery.

Any one leaving the city by the East gate would have seen the Cross as a conspicuous feature in front of him and would have described it as standing ante januas sacelli, with which it would have been in line. Its location on the site indicated would explain why the buildings of Magdalen Hall (1480) came to be placed so far back from the side of the road, and to what good fortune the College owes that incomparable plot of land (afterwards the Gravel Walk) with greensward and elm-trees by which the beauty of all street views of its buildings was until 1916 so greatly enhanced.]

IV. THE KITCHEN BLOCK, INCLUDING THE DIVINITY READER'S LODGINGS

[The College Kitchen, 'a large and rather gloomy old room, with a very high roof of strong timbers and several contiguous walls,' both by tradition and in the opinion of several antiquaries is ascribed to the Hospital of St. John, and at that the present writer would prefer to leave it, never having had an opportunity of making adequate examination of its walls. To his mind the orientation of the ground-plans both of this building and of the adjoining Divinity Reader's Lodgings on the North side, skew to the near walls of the Cloister Buildings, but parallel to the distant Chapel of St. John, is very strong evidence in favour of their representing constructions older than the College and probably buildings of the 1233 period. If it be surmised that the present College Kitchen is rather large for the size of the Hospital, it may be suggested either that it was used as a Refectory by the Brethren or that large kitchens were usual at that time.

The interesting early carved stone head in the south wall of the Kitchen will be described later (p. 430, Plate X).

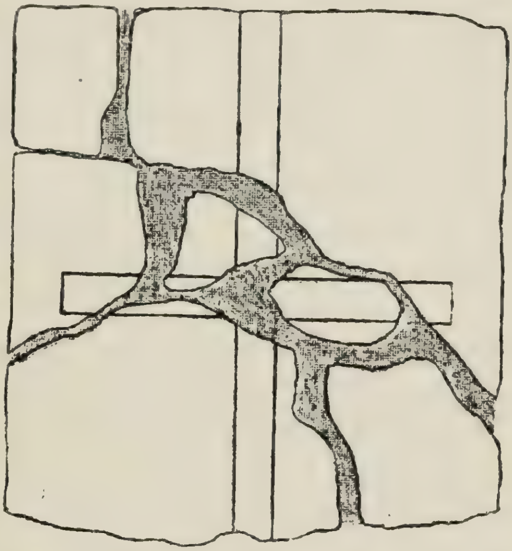

FIG. 9. FRAGMENTS OF GRAVESTONE UNCOVERED IN 1913.

The Divinity Reader's Lodgings, regarded as part of the Hospital by Wood,[1] were removed to make way for West's Buildings in 1783. The latter have however inherited their orientation, i.e. the orientation of the 1233 street front.]

V. MISCELLANEOUS

a. Gravestone.

[A gravestone of one of the Brethren of the Hospital was unearthed in the summer of 1913 in the middle of St. John's Quadrangle. Unfortunately only some fragments have escaped the navvy's pick, but they are sufficient to show that the upper face of the stone, about 25 inches in width, was slightly sloped off on either side and bore a plain cross lightly chiselled upon the surface. The short arms of the cross are 20 inches in length and 2 inches in width and the stone is about 6 inches in thickness (fig. 9).

The light which this stone throws upon the Cemetery of the Hospital is best explained in a Report to the President from Mr. Poole, who thereby performed his trust more faithfully than most College Bursars would have done.]

From the Keeper of the Archives.

20th September 1913.
Magdalen College,
Oxford.

My dear President,

You will, I think, wish me to give you an account of the discovery of traces of the Cemetery of St. John's Hospital in the course of excavation for the new drainage works in the College. In the middle of last month, when I was acting as Bursar, it was reported to me that the workmen had come upon a gravestone between two and three feet below the present surface of the ground at a spot which I have marked A on a very rough plan, which I enclose. The picks unfortunately broke the stone in two, but the smaller half was taken out and I had it placed on the floor of the great Tower. There are indications of a cross on it. Below it was found a skeleton apparently complete and lying in situ, but it was necessary to remove the bones as they were above the level of the drain which passed directly through them. I ordered them to be placed in a pocket dug out at the East side of the trench (marked 2 on the plan), where were also collected some other bones from graves (or a grave) in the immediate neighbourhood, which had been disturbed at an earlier date.

A second skeleton was found (and remains) entire just to the West of the grave of E. S. Chaplin (B), and a third was partially disturbed at a point which I have marked C, but which I rather think was a little nearer to the Lodgings.

I received a request from Mr. Dudley Buxton, of Exeter, who, I understand, is a demonstrator in the department of Human Anatomy, that he might examine the first collection of bones found before they were reinterred; this he did in the presence of the foreman, and then the remains were closed up. I send you Mr. Buxton's letter on the subject.

The extent of ground over which the burials are distributed is surprising: it was far larger than Mr. Salter had inferred from the documentary evidence. The rise of the soil, about 2½ feet, is also noticeable.

Believe me,
Yours very truly,
R. L. Poole.

b. Fragments of masonry built into the walls of the Chaplain's Quadrangle.

Great use was made by the college builders of the materials on the spot. f. 38

[After the completion of the Great Tower in 1506, work was at once started on the adjacent living rooms, which were three years in building and by which the Chaplains' Quadrangle became enclosed. Their width was governed by the width of the Chapel of St. John, the eastern windows of which, as well as the lower windows of the Tower, they completely covered up. Buckler had an opportunity of ascertaining that these newer walls were largely built of worked stones from the Hospital, a fact which I was able to verify during the recent refitting of the south-east staircase and rooms in 1913, when many architectural details of considerable if neglected interest were once more brought to light.]

The short length of the front beyond the Tower, and the return f. 61 wing of the Clerks' Court, were found to be so much dilapidated in the upper walls and roof as to require amendment without delay, and it was not neglected by the Society.

. . . The antiquarian interest of this Eastern angle of the College is, f. 62 or rather has been, very considerable. That part which incorporates the remains of the Hospital must be referred to with some degree of particularity, since it presents strong testimony in regard to the refined character of the architecture of edifices which have disappeared from among the buildings of the 13th century.

Nowhere else among the College buildings has a discovery been made of the like profuse employment of the materials of desolated walls. The fine finish of the workmanship had been partially injured under the process of re-application, but proof had been given how well 'new works may be constructed of old materials'.

Thus gleams of historical importance burst forth unexpectedly in ancient buildings when necessity leads to their dismemberment; and good feeling should never be wanting to preserve the recollection of their recent existence.

It has perhaps scarcely ever happened that one edifice of distinction has given way to another, without the one yielding, and the other accepting sound materials in stone and timber for the use of the
f. 63 intruder. The builder employed them freely in this inferior part of the building. No outward sign appeared in the upper wall of anything uncommon in the material: the remark was made that the wall differed from the rest in being composed of blocks of stone of uniform size, methodically disposed, the reverse of the method observed in the construction of the rest of the wall. But this particular piece of mason-work was not in quiet repose. Interior alterations and lacerations had disturbed the original compactness of the masonry, which, when opened, exposed fragments of the elegant architecture of the hospital. This curious exhibition made known the deliberation and care with which its walls had been taken to pieces, and the blocks handed over to the builders of the College, and thus employed.

There lay course upon course of single and clustered capitals, massive fragments of arches; of geometrical tracery, and complicated mouldings diverging from the prominent members of the pattern; of jamb mouldings of great depth, and in high relief; clustered pillars of light and robust make; with other fragments which once contributed to the perfection of designs which distinguished the architecture of St. John's Hospital.

The remark should be made that not a single example of sculptured ornament has been discovered: moldings, in all the rich variety of combination they admitted, constituted the ornament of the design.

c. Fragments of masonry built into the wall of the Chapel Porch of Magdalen College.

[The fragments figured in fig. 10 were discovered in the wall of the Chapel Porch in 1900 during the work of shifting the doorway to its original position. The principal fragments then found are now preserved in the Upper Library of the College; they included—

i. A short length of Early English Scroll-molding with a fillet along the scroll (fig. 10, 2). In character it so closely resembles the scroll-moldings in situ on the Chapel building, that it may without hesitation be referred to a building of the same age, and it may even be identified as part of a hood-molding over one of the south windows of the said Chapel, whence it may have been removed before the 'Perpendicularization' of that front in 1665. It is possible that this and other fragments of the Hospital building were introduced into the wall of the Chapel Porch either during the progress of Inigo Jones' work of ornamentation in 1636 or during the removal of that ornamentation in 1792.

ii. A rudely worked cruciform stone: the junction of a transom with the mullion for a window (fig. 10, 3 a, b).

iii. A portion of a cusped and elaborately molded arch-stone (fig. 10, 1) probably from an ornamental arcade carried on round pillars, or from the arch over a piscina. The deeply cut hollow between two rounds in the molding is characteristic. This fragment had obviously once been part of a building, because its exposed surfaces were coated with three coats of whitewash, and, like the Scroll-molding described above, it probably came from a building of the date (1234) of the Chapel.]

d. Sculptured Fragments.

[i. The Nun's Head Corbel. Inserted in the south wall of the Kitchen is a small carved stone head, 6 inches in height, that has every appearance of being coeval with the Hospital (Plate X). It was perhaps originally the corbel of an interior hood-mold: if so it is the sole specimen of the sculpture of the Hospital that is now preserved to us.

A very similar sculptured corbel is to be seen in the Chapter House in Christ Church, where it supports the corner column in the north-west corner of that early 13th-century room.

ii. St. John's Head. Perhaps the stone Head reputed to be the Head of St. John the Baptist may also have belonged to the Hospital. It is now standing in a niche in the western gable end of the buildings of St. John's Quadrangle over the present Porter's Lodge, and therefore not far from the supposed site of the Great Gate of the Hospital. Buckler may be referring to this head in his note: 'Some of the sculptures still preserved in the wall of the front court of the College are as ancient as the 12th century' (f. 43).]

e. Fragments of Norman Architecture.

[Among the Buckler drawings there is a sketch (MS. 36,433, No. 256) of two pieces of nicely designed stone-work which were dug up in a Quadrangle in Magdalen College in 1820.

The stones were two of the quoin-stones from the sides or arch of a window or doorway, probably the latter. The actual corner is formed by a vertical roll-molding, against which abut the points of two chevron moldings which are carved in planes at right angles to one another,—an arrangement that is not very clear from Buckler's drawings (Pl. X). When the stones were in their proper architectural positions, the chevrons including the ornamented triangles would have been in the plane of the wall-face, the other chevrons would have decorated the sides of the aperture or the under surface of the arch, as part of a zigzag ornament. At first sight this chevron or zigzag ornament recalls the late Norman work of which we have such a fine example in Iffley Church (c. 1160). Indeed the two beads and beak of one might be a conventionalized form of the bird-heads of the west doorway of that Church, while the 'fleur-de-lys' ornament of the other is paralleled by the foliated foot-ornament on a late Norman base at St. Cross, Winchester (c. 1180).[1] At the same time both ornaments were in use in the Early English Style, as at Ringstead, Northants, though we are not aware of their association with chevrons so late as the 13th century.

These two specimens of transition Norman carving are of supreme interest because they alone of all the stones, which we have seen, belonged to a building of a period appreciably earlier than the Charter and Chapel of Henry III. They are the sole material evidence of buildings upon this site as old as, or slightly older than, the charter of Hugo de Malaunay in 1194.[2]

Since the above observations were set up in type, I have had the good fortune to wander into Hertford College and there to find four sculptured stones of late Norman design; two, the arch-stones of a small niche or window, are decorated on two faces with palmette or scallop ornament, and two are the identical stones from which Buckler's sketches were made. It is stated that all four stones were found in foundations at Hertford College about 1889, when the demolition of the buildings of 1820–2 was in progress, to make way for the new Library.

If Buckler's note that they were 'Fragments of St. John's Hospital dug up in Quadrangle Magd: Coll: 1820' be correct—at any rate in the matters of place and date, it follows that these stones, after being seen and drawn at Magdalen by him, may have been part of the College contribution to the new buildings for Magdalen Hall on the site of Hertford College. The other known contributions made by Magdalen College for this purpose were stone from the College quarry near Shotover by College Order 15 March, 1820, and about £12,600 in money in 1822. It is quite comprehensible that any unwanted fragments which might have been lying about at Magdalen College should have been passed on to the Hertford College site: but that they should have been re-exhumed and be lying exposed for identification during the very week when the proof-sheets of this one and only description of the Hospital Buildings were being read, is little short of miraculous.

Fortunately an account of a find of old stones at Hertford is extant. In 1822 Skelton published a plate[1] of Hertford College buildings with drawings of architectural fragments which he described as 'Curious Norman Capitals and parts of Arches found amongst the stonework of a chimney sometime since removed': these he accepted as proof that a Norman building of importance had once existed on the site of Hertford College. Several of Skelton's sketches represent early capitals, one undoubtedly represents an arch-stone with the palmette or scallop ornament already mentioned, but none represent the Buckler stones, although one sketch represents a stone with chevron moldings, that are so similar that it may have come from the same arch as the Buckler stones!

If we are to believe both Skelton and Buckler, it follows that there must have been a substantial building of ornate late Norman work 'somewhere'. Two of its stones were found buried in the Quadrangle at Magdalen in 1820, and in 1889 were again found in Hertford College, where they now are. Another stone, apparently from the same archway, was found with other Norman stones in the old chimney on the Hertford site and was engraved by Skelton in 1822. The Capitals found at the same time are not at present known to me, but two niche-arch stones with palmette ornamentation are illustrated in Skelton's 1822 plate and the originals (after being buried for 67 years) are once more visible in Hertford College.

All these stones were of the time of Hugo de Malaunay. I am in a state of uncertainty as to whether they belonged to his building on the St. John's Hospital site, or to a Norman building on the Hertford site, or to a Norman building on a third site, but I think it likely that they all once belonged to the same structure.]

f. The earliest Drawing of the Hospital of St. John.

[The buildings delineated in a manuscript of Matthew Paris so closely resemble those of the Domus Conversorum, founded in London by Henry III in 1232 to serve as a refuge for converted Jews, that they were evidently designed by the same master mind, either builder or artist. The windows are also identical with those of the Home for Lepers established near London by 'holy Queen Maud', wife of Henry I, who himself founded the leper-house of St. Bartholomew in Oxford. Representations of both buildings are given in Clay, Mediaeval Hospitals of England, 1909. Although one cannot rely absolutely upon the accuracy of the details represented, the drawing reproduced in Fig. 11 may be accepted as evidence for a Tower at the east end and an entrance doorway at the west end of the edifice, but whether these structures are wholly, or at any rate in part, those which we have already described; whether the Tower survived late enough to have suggested Magdalen Tower to the Founder of the College; or whether they stood further back from the street, we must leave to the judgement of others. The simplest theory is that this drawing actually represents the Chapel building of the Hospital at a very early time.]

g. General Conclusions and Notes on Construction. f. 66

So very little of the history of St. John's Hospital is known that the curious in these days must not expect to gather more decisive information as to the quality of its buildings than has been derived from the relics discovered by the several circumstances already mentioned. f. 31

The most diligent search at different times of alteration has not brought to light any fragments of the Hospital walls mingled with those which formed the great bulk of the buildings stretched across the precinct from North to South.

What they were as to shape and extent cannot now be known, but if their strength was equal to that of the remains which have survived to recent years, despair must have overtaken the workmen long before they threw down the side walls of the great chambers of the Hospital.

The builders made choice of a most durable rubble stone, rough and incapable of being reduced to shape, found in the neighbourhood, and forming walls of such extraordinary strength when combined with mortar of the like quality, that the workmen must have been conscious of the almost everlasting firmness of the structures they were raising or the sacred obligation of charity.

f. 66 It was perhaps prudent in the possessor of property thus acquired not to preserve the records of the history, or to proclaim the merit of the buildings devoted to destruction. At no period earlier than that under notice was less compunction felt for the mutilation or the demolition of architecture of superb quality.

The power of doing mischief to this extent was oftentimes purchasable; and was too frequently perpetrated in great Churches for no better reason than to confer upon them the costume of architecture suitable to the taste of the reigning fashion.

The Founder of Magdalen College had no opportunity to indulge a propensity of this kind. The collegiate plan he had prepared for the site could not be engrafted upon the walls of an Hospital, whatever the measures of its buildings. His Master Mason, William Orcheyerd, an expert and able practitioner, had no choice but to throw substantial and beautiful structures into ruins, and to commit the materials to the handicraftsman.

h. Note on the Picture of the Chapel of the Hospital, reproduced on FIG. 3.

Mrs. Poole, who has done such good work in connection with Oxford Historical Portraits, has recently drawn my attention to two unpublished letters in the Bodleian Library which describe the circumstances under which the old picture of the south front of Magdalen College came into the possession of the College.

The first is a letter from Dr. Wm. Holmes, President of St. John's, to Dr. Rawlinson, Feb. 5, 1744/5:

> I must now acquaint you that I have dispos'd of ye Pictures. Dr. Butler will take an opportunity of returning you ye thanks of ye College for ye Picture presented to them, which they received with great pleasure.
>
> MS. Rawl. Letters, 29, fol. 75.

The second letter is from Dr. Rawlinson to Thomas Rawlins, June 18, 1745:

> I met with an old painting of Magd. Coll. Oxford at the end of Q. Mary or beginning of Q. Eliz. which appears by the Spanish Habits on the bridge. It pleased them so well that they have given it a place in their Hall.
>
> Ballard MS. ii. No. 102, fol. 166.

The picture has been dated c. 1660.
